HE WAS ANGRY. Herman Wise is usually of an agreeable disposition, but yesterday he was mad through and through; he had ordered a large assortment of new goods from the place to be shipped about October 1st, so that they would be here about the time he was ready to open his new store. Instead of that, the manufacturer shipped them so that they got here yesterday.

"I have been trying to cut down my stock," said he, "so that it would be easy to move, and here I am with a larger stock than ever."

"What am I going to do about it? Why I will do this: You see these suits? Well, I will have to re-ship them to the sale and again give people the choice of any suit or overcoat in the house for $1.50, and set this underwear and overalls, boys' clothing and everything else will be cut to the bone. Oh, I will get rid of them!" And he went clicking manufacturers in general and this one in particular.
