WHO AND BRADLEY?

It is not quite easy to understand the the majority which he has won, or in the majority which he overcomes, with a kindred allment, it is specific claim to a presidential nomination or at least to a place on the presidencial ticket. It is partly because, for the die being, his name represents a party triumph which makes him the hero of the hour, and partly because the signal v ctory of the leading candidate in a political central tastes and has at times written verse of popularity and of the qualities which, it is Republican majority in Chio cas undoubtedly given Mr. McKinley a big boost for the presidential nomination, while the result in Kentucky, with its surprising victory for the Republicans, is scarcely known before Bradley is hailed in some quarters as the coming man for the presidency, or at least for the second place on the ticket. The theory put forward for associating these two names on the ticket does not lack plausibility. McKinticket does not lack plausibility. He has bune. the courage of his convictions. But he has no record of states nanship or political prominence in the past to justify the movement of his Kentucky friends to give him the first place on the ticketand he is Lardly entitled to a second. S. iii McKinley and Brulley would make a very popular ticket throughout the West. The suggestion is said to have emanated from New York Republicans that Morton and Buffalo Express. Bradley would form a strong combination, and the tempting consideration is presented that it might result in Bradley's accession to the presidency. For Morton is an old man, and there is something crucily cynical in an ove ture wnich assumes that the burden of the presidency would kill him and leave the place vacant for his associate on the ticket. At any rate the Kentucky election has made Bradley the most prominent candidate for the time being for the second place on the Republican ticket. If there was any assumnce that his nomination would keep Kentucky one would have a stronger claim on the ground of national expediency.
