DECENT JOURNALISM.

The natural impulse of even intelligent citizens when a public journal is misled in its columns, but they do not speak, because they do not know, of the vastly greater amount of sensational articles founded on truth, which might be published with entire justice to the implicated parties, but which are daily suppressed by editors, solely because such publications would wantonly wound innocent parties and at times overthrow credit. There is not a day in the week that the men responsible for the opinions of clean newspapers are not compelled to consider the question of publishing or suppressing facts which are entirely proper for public information, but which, if printed, would do greater harm to the innocent than good to the public.

Of this important duty of editors the public have little knowledge, and, being unknown, it is thoughtlessly assumed that the great aim of every enterprising newspaper man is to fling sensations before the public regardless of their truth, when in point of fact they suppress vastly more than they print. There are dozens of highly reputable citizens of Astoria and of every community in the whole and of every community in the whole country, who could feelingly testify to the the interest of the peace of homes and the of war. american journalism. If they shall de so, there would be a more just judgment of the generous fidelity of editors to the highest interests of the community.
