WONDERFUL EYES OF INSECTS.

The "facets" of the eye-masses of som-species of insects are exceedingly numer-ous; in some cases, in fact, the number is entirely beyond belief. Each of these Dear Editor:—

Every clean citizen will commend the course of the Astorian in speaking out boldly against the encroachment of the disgraceful element of society on the thoroughfares over which decent men, women and children are compelled to pass two or three times a day. It is a standing blot on our city government that houses of ill fame are tolerated anywhere in our city. But iniquitous greed is absolutely insatiable. Tolerate it anywhere and it soon leaps over the bounds you may set for it, and empty its sewage into the very presence of innocence itself. It seems astounding that any man with a clean wife and a family growing up around him should be so blinded by a few pairy dollars as to deliberately sell himself and his good name to and permit his property to be used for such ignoble purposes.

And while passing this stricture let us name to and permit his property to be used for such ignoble purposes.

And while passing this stricture let us remember what we are doing by 'icenseing and tolerating the social leper in our city practically unmolested. First of all we are giving a most forcible objection noted above, that the swiftest insects have the greatest number of eye facets. The swift-winged butterfles have from 19,000 to 17,000 in each eye-mass, and trailly get the impression that we are not much shocked by the exhibition of vice to be seen nightly on our streets.

What wonder then if girls scarcely 15
