EXPORTING OUR SILVER.

One of the arguments of the silver men is that the refusal of the right of free coinage destroys the value of one of the great products of the United States, and diminishes by so much the total of our national wealth. So far is this from sliver cainage and silver purchase by the government has helped to make a market abroad for this metal where none existed before. This is one of those curious and unexpected results that fequently annear from a study of the trade reports. We are told that Europe has "demonstized" silver, and that the markets of the world have been closed against it by our course. Silver not being a commodity that can be used in any way to support life, and being available only for use as money and in the arts, it might naturally for it in any other way than by restor nig its monetary use in some country or other would be impossible. Yet the facts tell a different story.

In 1800 the export of silver from the United States was but $1,000,000, in 100) there was a net export of $9,000,000, and in 1892 of $14,250,000. In the following year came the repeal of the Sherman act, and the cesastion of the puchase of it of 4.50,000 ounces per month. This was an Absolute cutting off of a steady demand.
