The steamer Arcata broke her shaft on her, last voyage down the coast. She was first reported by the collier Wellington, which passed the disabled steamer or last Thursday morning near Cape Men-docine. She was then trying to reach port under sail, and refused the Wel-lington's effer of assistance. Later in the day the San Prancisco Exchange rewived a telegram that the Arago had picked the Arcata up and was towing her to port. The Arcata is owned by the Oregon Coal and Navigation Com-pany, is commanded by Captain Cousins and runs of Coos bay.

After one of the roughest, most dis-After one of the roughest, most dis-agreeable trips on record, the steamer-City of Topeka arrived in Scattle last Sanday night twenty-four hours late. There was not two hours pleasant weather during the entire trip, and often-times Pilot George could not see the water over the guard rail, so dense was water over the guard rail, so dense was the fog. When the steamer left Juneau on Wednesday, February 12, the mercusy was II degrees below zero, and the show was from eight to ten feet on a level. Captain Wallace says the weather during this trip was the coldest and most severe he has ever experienced in Alaska, and residents of Juneau kept so close to their homes that it is impossible to get any news. The wind blew so hard after leaving Juneau and the weather got so thick that the steamer had to put into Hunter's bay for shelter all one night.

A Port Townsend dispatch to the Ta-coma Ledger, dated February 17th, says: With six powerful tugs pulling, all her extra weight in spars and ballast re-moved and exceptionally favorable weather, the British ship Kilbrannan, which went asbore in a squall ten days ago at Point Wilson lighthouse, is only eight fost mearer deep water. The ateight feet bearer deep water. The at-tempt to that her was made at daybreak this morning, but had to be stopped when the big ton Type grounded and had to be pulled into deep water by the others. It is understood that another at-tempt will be made tomorrow morning, and as that is the highest tide of the month if the Kilbrannan does not floshe will remain on the shingle beach un-til the big tides of April and May. He-yond the strain on the vessel and a few small holes which have been punctured in her bottom, the vessel is still unin-jured and will remain so unless severe weather comes. After the tug was firmly fastened her engines were reversed and driven at full speed. It was low tide at this time and as the tug could not break away from her moornings berpropeller scooped up the mud in the channel, and the wash of the vessel threw the mud out into the stream. In this way a channel was cleared, after which the tug was transferred to within several feet of the dry dock, at which point she also threw up the mud in large quantities. When this work was completed the Sea King was made taut at the other extreme end of the drydock, and the propeller was worked with such success that the mud there was scooped up and washed out into the bay by the back wash from the vessel."
