nervous exhaustion. At the suggestion of a friend I commenced the use of Paine's celery compound, with the result that my strength has steadily improved, and I find myself in far better health than I have known for years.

I believe also that it has enabled me to escape my periodical attack of theumatiam, as every season since that time with the advent of cold, damp weather, I have suffered severely from that disease in a chronic form. So far this winter I have escaped without a single twinge of my old enemy. I very cheerfully recommend it to any one in similar need, in the full belief that it will be helpful in every case. Very sincerely yours.

cares nor hard work to bring down the health, there might not be the urgent necessity that now exists for taking this best of spring remedies-Paine's celery compound.

Int as the great majority of lives are ordered—with too much work, too much anxiety, too little sleep, by the time winter is over the drain on the nervous energy has become excessive, the nervous are in sad need of being streagthened, and the blood of being purified.

Faine's celery compound absolutely meets this great modern necessity.

Paine's celery compound will bring back nerve strength and replace poor, thin, pale blood with a ruddy, health-making stream.

The windows of the restaurant were open, and the cool, fragrant air of the spring night was struggling with the smoke-laden atmosphere of the room. "It was noon when I reached the end of my ride, and I gazed with delight at the funlit landscape before my eyes. Cayuga Lake, one of those which, with Lake Eric, form the network of inland lakes in New York, lay before me in its keep them. We believe our granite ware stock is doing peculiar loveliness. Between rugged, rocky shores, confronting each other like sullen foes, the long, narrow sheet of silver extended its clear surface as if striving to reconcile the two enemies who had stared defiantly at each other for centuries. Across the lake, which is about forty miles long, and, at this point, a mile wide, the railway trains run on an immense wooden bridge, a marvel of American enterprise, which

I saw indistincity, as if in a dream, one of the escaped criminals bending over me, then darkness shrouded my mind. "It must have been late at night when consciousness returned. I opened my eyes and saw above me in the deep blue sky a radiant full moon. A dull, heavy sensation in the back of my head made me try to put my hand on the aching spot but I discovered that I was bound hand and foot. Gradually I collected my thoughts, remembered the attack by highwaymen, and a terrible foreboding, which made my heart stop beating, darted through my brain. I felt that I was laid across two sharp parallel projections, which pressed against me most painhaid across two sharp parallel projections, which pressed against me most painfully, and, listening intently, I heard, far below me, a faint splashing noise. "I almost lost consciousness again.
But I soon recovered my composure.
Then I tugged desperately at my bonds till they almost cut my muscles, shricked, and at last wept like a child. I tried to roll myself into a different position, and remembered that an incautious move would hurl me into the silent waves of the Cayuga—bound hand and foot, mo-tionless as a stone.

The light of the large, to me fearfully, brilliant moon, the plashing of the water below, the wind blowing sofly, then the deathlike silence again, rarely interrupted even by the distant note of a bird-all became unendurable and inspired me with unspeakable terror. And the rails! The rails! My senses tortured me. I could not escape them. The wooden beams of the bridge trainbled almost imperceptibly from the washing of the water. I imagined I felt the approach of the train and my hair bristied;

"There are some things, gentlemen, "There are some things, gentlemen, which are totally incomprehensible to me; one of them is how I survived that night. One thought stood distinctly hefore my mind. "Now, for an indefinitely brief space of time, I fancied that I saw a bright light, a blast of hot air fanned me, then suddenly darkness shrouded me: I neard a thundering roar as though the very heavens were failing.

"Close, very close, barely an inch above, the monster dushed over me—I was safe. Still half unconscious. I heard a deafening rumbiling and clatterheard a deafening rumbling and clatter-ing, and saw shadowy masses flit by; there was another moment of mortal dread—the book of a chain which hung lower than the rest caught me, dragging me along a few feet and finally tore a large piece from the breast of my coat, releasing me—then every object danced around me, the moon, the tridge, and the high bank whirled in a hiddy maze above and below me and my senses

"When I regained my consciousness I found myself in my bed, with familiar faces around me. To make the story short, I had been picked up the norning after that terrible night by a signal man, recognized and taken to Auburn. The physician paused. His pullid face, the expression of horror in his eyes, the perspiration which stood in large drops upon his brow, showed how vivid must be his remembrances of the scene, and how greatly the parration had exhausted him.

Gradually the breathless anxiety with which we had listened to the story related
