The Boston Advertiser tells this little story of one of the battles that was won for sound money by hard and hearty fighting, the whole stress and temper and strength of which seems nearly forgotten by those who should hold it in

"In the year of our Lord 1891, an election for governor took place in Ohio. The chief opposing candidates during the ceding campaign were a man name McKinley and a man named Campbell.
The same McKinley. The same Campbell. The principal issue in that campaign was the question of free and unlimited coinage of silver dolars at the ratio to gold of 16 to 1. Camptell was the Democratic nominee. Mckinley was the Republican nominee. The same Campbell, Likewise the same McKin-ley, aforesaid. The Democratic platform tained a free coinage plank; yea, contained a free comage plants, year, verily, the regular and regulation 16 to 1 free silver coinage plants. Democratic platforms generally did, in that year of grace, 1891. About thirty Democratic state platforms contained that same kind of a plant that same year.

"McKinley accepted the challenge, He reed the fighting. Democrats are fond forced the fighting. Democrats are fond of calling McKinley 'the fittle Napoleon. Napoleon had a habit of forcing the Sighting. When the votes were counted McKinley was found to have been elected and Campbell defeated by one of the most sweeping majorities that Ohio had given to any Republican candidate."

McKinley opened the campaten for sound money, though it has been charged .50 that he is a tariff man only, and there were Republicans of the state then, as always, in terror, who were atarmed by the fact that McKinley was a candidate and started in to fight free silver. The Democrats of Ohio have not recovered from the blow to this day.
