AN EASY ANSWER.

An old correspondent asks the Asto-

There cannot be two standards of value would receive a large majority." our monetary system, or rather keeping very enthusiastic over it." It conformed as it now is, to that of all other great nations in the world. They have the gold standard, and, whether right or wrong, will have no other. We must of necessity have the same measure for our money, or cease to do business with them except at great inconvenience and disadvantage.

It thus happens that the men who defend the gold standard are fighting to maintain the parity value of the silver dollar, for it is only by the preservation of the gold standard that the circulation of the silver dollar can be maintained; and this is why the gold standard advocate is the true friend of silver. This is the true issue of the money question, and after all, what a plain and simple one it is. Shall we keep our money at the certain fixed value which makes it good, or shall we try an experiment which would reduce it to the vacillating, uncertain value which the history of the at Richmond, the county seat, is a tabworld shows has always made it bad?

If our subscriber, therefore, is satisfied with the present value and purchasing power of his sliver dollar, he should act with the gold standard men and help protect that dollar from the depreciation which would inevitably result through the free coinage of silver.

The Boies Democrats of Iowa say in their platform that "the lessening of individual enterprises" and "enforced idlecess of great numbers of the working chases are due to adherence to the gold of your family being exposed.-Ex. standard." It is worth while to contrast with this statement of brawling demagogues that of a business man who gives Astoria job office before going elsethe real reason why individual enterprise | where, is lessened, and workingmen are idle. A large glass factory in Ottawa, Ill., closed down last week for an indefinite time, throwing 500 men out of work. One of the owners says:

Had not the matter of the value of a follar been in agitation the works would still be running. We were unwilling to plie up our stock in our warefounds for which we must pay a full value abiliar to labor and for materials and then sell it when the market opened for half its value. We have to buy universals from foreign countries, for which we must pay in gold. Many other manufacturers look open this matter in the same light we do. Like us, they have no mones to risk when the prospect would be payment for goes in a currency cut in half in value.

In case free silver is a part of the platform of either party the greatest sufferers will be the laborers, who will be kept out of employment and be forced to make all manner of sacrifices to keep from starcellers.

Here is the employer's story. He do and remittances must be addressed to not shut down because of the goal standand, but since he is afraid of the silver The Astorian guarantees to its sub- one, which will cut down the value of scribers the largest circulation of any silver certificates, greenbacks, and bank newspaper published on the Columbia notes one-half.
