VAST OUTPUT OF CHEAP SILVER.

The last report of the director of the mint contains a table giving the silver coinage of the mints of the world for the years 1873-1894 inclusive. The total number of ounces was 2.132 millions. The coinage value was 2,756 millions. This vast sum of silver bullion was coined during the twenty-two years subsequent to the "crime of '71." Never was there so much coined during any preceding twenty-two year period: and yet, in spite of this enormous consumption for monetary purposes, the commercial value of silver kept on fall-if, when that blessing is denied us by ing during the whole period. This is not supprising in the light of the fig-appeal to the national tonic. Hostetter's not surprising in the light of the figures showing the enormously increased goation upon a permanent basis, reme-production of silver. The total output dies hervousness, billousness and constiof the world for the twenty-two years kiney troubles. It also counteracts the last seven years the production was 579 million ounces, as against 1,151 million ounces in the fifteen preceding years. The number of ounces coined during this justly popular invigorant, 1888-1894 was 747 millions. That was heavy, but the price of silver was not enhanced. The experiment of adding to the value of sliver by coining it has but one; all other crimes may pass for been tried on a grand scale and has virtues in him.-Youngfalled utterly. It is, too, increasing in quantity. while at the same time it preserves stability of value, so that its use as money is not limited by a diminishing supply. Civilization and gold go hand In hand, and yet in the United States, one of the most progressive nations of the world, we see a large political party contending for a baser metal and a degraded currency!

The consoling reflection is that there is no possible prospect for the success of such a party.

It would be hard to conceive of a stronger testimonial to the value of the services rendered by the Republican house of representatives to the country than the following from the New York Herald:

Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina, Texas and Virginia added, would give only 182 electoral votes where 224 are necessary to a choice.

Seventy of these possible electoral votes are extremely doubtful, while about half the number are in the highest degree likely to be cast on the other side, more than offsetting Missouri's seventeen doubtful votes even should they be cast for the free silver candidate. On the other hand, New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Lelaware, Maryland, Ohio, West Virginia, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota are practically certain to be Republican if the Democrats nominate a free-silver candidate on a free-silver platform."
