A RELIGION OF LOVE.

Our F ther which art in heaven, We of the present generation enterfain much more satisfactory views of both this life and the hereafter than our fathers did. Whether it is that a Naches larger education, like some powerful neid, has disintegrated the old dogmas which made the world tremble with fear, I do not know, but that some new and elevating influence has entered the universal life and changed to even the careless observer. These brighter and more hopeful views of religion are like a tonic when one is worn and weary. It would be as impossible to go back to the dogmas of a century ago as to give up what modern science has done to make us remfertable and to add to our hap-

Ir was the delight of former days to declare that this world is a vale of tears, but we have learned a better. lesson, and caught a glimpse of a larger truth. That there are tears may not be denied, for they have fallen on every human cheek. But are there not smiles also, and is there not good cheer in abundance? Is there more Lives Ra reason to generalize from the tears than from the smiles, or more reason to declare that life is dreary than that it is beautiful?

Was it not strange for men to take a gloomy view who had happy households, wives who were as devoted as is the sunshing to the earth, and sons and daughters who were strong of limb and pure of heart? Our fathers in their daily lives were as Joyous and contented as we are. They surrounded themselves with all the pleasures which their circumstances made possible, and yet, when they rode along green fields and under a blue sky to church, they were taught to regard religion not only as a soleinn and serious, but as a dreadful thing.
