OPEN THE MILLS, NOT THE MINTS

"I do not know what you think about it, but I believe that it is a good deal better to open up the mills of the United States to the labor of America than to open the mints of the United States to the silver of the world," said Major McKinley in an address at Canton, Ohio, on Wednesday.

This sentiment, uttered as an off-hand observation after an eloquent tribute to the bravery of his old comrades in arms, will live longer than any utterance contained in the long and labored effort of Mr. Bryan delivered on the same day in Madison Square Garden. It consists of only forty-nine words, but it contains more sound political sense, more economic sense, more unanswerable logic and more patriotism than can be found in the 16,000 words of Mr. Bryan's speech of acceptance.

Mr. Bryan used 16,000 words to make a plea for a special class of citizens residing in one small section of the country, who have a product upon which they ask the government to stamp a double value. Mr. McKinley in forty-nine matchless words made a plea for the grand army of American toilers in the workshop and on the farm.

The free coinage by this government of all the silver of the world at 16 to 1 would not give employment to a single mill workman, nor would it increase the wages of those who are now employed. Mr. Bryan's plan will give no dollars to idle labor. Major McKinley's plan provides for a policy that will enable every American workman to earn an honest dollar by honest toil—the only plan by which a circulating medium, be it large or small, gold, silver, or paper, can be of any benefit to the people of any civilized nation.

The mills and not the mints will enable the laboring men of this country to acquire the necessities and many of the luxuries of life. The mills and not the mints will increase wages by creating a larger demand for skilled labor, which, like every other commodity on earth, is amenable to the inexorable law of supply and demand. The mills and not the mints can increase the price of the farmers' products for every new mill, built under protection, creates a new market and helps to build up a town, for men who work in mills must eat. Increasing the demand for produce must inevitably tend to increase the price of produce.

The mints cannot make a bushel of wheat worth a dollar. Mills which build up new towns and people them with prosperous communities that increase the consumption of breadstuffs will raise the price of wheat quicker than all the free coinage laws that can be enacted.

The mints cannot create value. Only the brawny arms of honest toil, directed by genius and intelligence, can create value. The mints cannot create prosperity or happiness. The opportunity to earn the best money in the world by legitimate industry is the plan proposed by Major McKinley. No sensible or honest American expects to get money in any other way.

Idle workmen want the wages of the mills; the mints can give them nothing.—Times-Herald.

The statement of a London paper that in anticipation of the election of McKinley a number of English manufacturers are projecting branches in the United States, is entirely credible. Immediately after the enactment of the tariff law of 1894 a very large amount of foreign capital came to the United States for investment in manufacturing enterprises, this having much to do with the remarkable industrial progress and the general prosperity of that period. There is every reason to believe that with a restoration of protection there would again be a great inflow of foreign capital, for there would be a stronger inducement than six years ago, since Republican success would also carry with it assurance of the maintenance for many years of the existing monetary standard. There is an enormous amount of idle capital in Europe and with protection and sound money as the fixed policy of the United States there would be presented here the most inviting field in the world for the investment of this capital. It is not now being attracted by speculative ventures in remote parts of the earth. Its experience in Australia, South Africa, and some other quarters has not been such as to encourage further extensive investments in those regions. It is waiting for the opportunity to go where there is stability and soundness and this nation of 70,000,000 of people, with boundless resources still to be developed and magnificent chances for both capital and labor, would offer just the desired opportunity if assured the policy necessary to development and relief of the danger of currency debasement. The success of the Republican party next November will effect both of these results. It will assure a tariff policy under which our industries can grow and it will settle the fact that the American people want their money to continue equal to the best money of the civilized world. With that accomplished foreign capital will come here in greater volume than ever before, to the benefit of all interests. And especially the interests of the producer and laborer. This added to the hundreds of millions of home capital that would be brought into active use could not fail to bring on an era of great prosperity for all classes of our people.
