CARLISLE AT COVINGTON.

The outrage suffered by Secretary Carlisle at Covington will be duly and can be most appropriately resented by law-abiding citizens at the polls on the 23 day of November. Revolving as it was, it is yet doubtful if at this time there could have happened a campaign incident more likely to result in beneficial consequences, so far as the best interests of the country are concerned. That a public man of Mr. Carlisle's exalted standing and position cannot address a political meeting in his own native state without being subjected to abuse of so gross a nature that its infliction upon a dog would be a police misdemeanor in any civilized community, is well calculated to bring a blush of shame to the face and produce a rankling sense of personal humiliation in the breast of every true American citizen. It is, therefore, perfectly safe to say thousands of men yesterday in every section of the country bitterly raged over their impotency to avenge the insults heaped upon Mr. Carlisle, but there is solace in the reflection that the secretary is both a sensible man and a patriot, and that after the first sting and natural momentary mortification of the indignities offered him, he probably rejoiced that through the sacrifice of his own feelings a great good had been wrought to his country. Hundreds of thousands of votes will unquestionably be added to the majority cast against William Jennings Bryan in November through this piece of misconduct by his zealous in Kentucky. It is not simply in the Democratic votes which will be thus changed directly to the support of the Republican ticket that the result of Bryanism will be made more decisive and overwhelming, but it is in the rude awakening and realization of the kind of company they are now keeping which has come to thousands of patriotic but misinformed free silver believers that the greatest benefit results to the country. It is the class who have felt hurt at the characterization in the public press of Bryan and his co-conspirators as anarchists, Altgeld, Tillman, Watson, Penoyer, and three-fourths of the other Bryan leaders and managers, are anarchists, and they know it. These men have been inwardly and secretly proud and gratified—whatever other feeling some of them may have professed—that they were recognized and denounced as anarchists. But the honest and deluded element among the Popocratic followers have been so infatuated by the pleas and sophistries dinned into their ears for free silver that their judgment was warped, and they were entirely oblivious to the viciousness of other principles announced in the Chicago platform and were unable to discern the character of the men whom Bryan's success would inevitably thrust into places of prominence and power. The scales have fallen from the eyes of these men, and what the burning of the mill in Rhode Island failed to do, the mobbing of a member of the cabinet will accomplish. Bryan, of course, it may be expected, will repudiate the action of his henchmen at the Covington meeting, but he and no one else, is responsible for it. For weeks past his speeches have been studiously addressed to the large elements of unrest and disorder in various sections of the country. He has openly sought to inflame the passions of envy, hatred and malice among his lowest and most ignorant followers. After this outbreak at Covington, no respectable citizen, whatever his views on the money question, can afford to advocate the election of Bryan. He would be ostracized by respectable society in his community if he did. There has been no doubt whatever in the minds of well informed men for three months past that McKinley would be elected, and there is now every reason to believe that the Covington occurrence will make the majorities against the mobocracy platform and candidates so stupendous that the future historian will wonder that the country was ever disturbed by the spectral possibility of the election of such a creature as Bryan to the presidency.

Added evidence that the farmers of the Middle West differ not materially from their fellows in Maine and Vermont in their views on money obligations and national finances is furnished in a unique plot conducted by a Chicago firm of farm loan negotiators. It was unique in the fact that it was limited to farmers who are mortgagors, the class of voters to whom Bryan has looked most confidently for support, and for whose alleged benefit he would split the mortgage-paying dollar. The result is what might have been expected except by those who have been too ready to believe that the farmers, as a class, are willing to be dishonest by statute.

On the books of the Chicago firm were the names of 4,000 farmers in Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, and Missouri, who are holders of money secured by mortgage. Each was asked to indicate on a postal card how he intends to vote this fall, and to make the poll a secret one, each was instructed not to place his name on the card. Of the 1,287 who have answered thus far, 579 will vote for McKinley, 136 for Bryan, 48 for Palmer, and 23 for the Prohibition nominee, 21 being undecided. Eighty out of each hundred of these mortgage "afflicted" farmers declare for sound money. A much smaller ratio than this through the farming districts of the West would roll up a phenomenal majority against the Chicago repudiationists.

Mr. Bryan has made no reference to the advance in the price of wheat and the decline in the price of silver, but it is in the rude awakening and realization of the kind of company they are now keeping which has come to thousands of patriotic but misinformed free silver believers that the greatest benefit results to the country. It is the class who have felt hurt at the characterization in the public press of Bryan and his co-conspirators as anarchists, Altgeld, Tillman, Watson, Penoyer, and three-fourths of the other Bryan leaders and managers, are anarchists, and they know it. These men have been inwardly and secretly proud and gratified—whatever other feeling some of them may have professed—that they were recognized and denounced as anarchists. The scales have fallen from the eyes of these men, and what the burning of the mill in Rhode Island failed to do, the mobbing of a member of the cabinet will accomplish. THE HEMORRHAGIC CANDIDATE. Until recently it had been supposed to be a well known fact that Mr. William Jennings Bryan's heart bled for the poor and down-trodden, over whose prostrate forms the remorseless Juggernaut of wealth was constantly passing to and fro like a steam roller on a new stretch of asphalt. Whatever his mental deficiencies might be or his erratic motions portend, it was generally conceded that he felt the warmest sort of impulse to make himself solid with the tolling masses. His vocabulary was always drenched in tears for the victims of the gold conspirators who accomplished the heinous crime of 1873. It was for their sake he went whirling around the country at a great personal inconvenience, when he might have reposed peacefully in a Nebraska law office without a thing to do. There were a great many persons who thought he was a wonderful spectacle, and even those who were mean enough to think he was ridiculous were honest enough to admit that he was trying to be sublime.

But it looks as if this elevated view of Mr. Bryan's performances would have to be abandoned, or at the very least revised. It is now announced without contradiction that there is a degree of down-troddenness which does not appeal to him. It is fatal to your prospects to be too down-trodden. You have got to be just down-trodden enough. People, for example, who can't raise as much as $50 for a flood of compassion don't get one from Mr. Bryan. It is alleged, to be sure, that his heart is bleeding all the time, but his mouth doesn't leak at less than $10 a minute. There are scores of towns on his route where Juggernaut continues to do business at the old stand while the Bryan special tips past with a tantalizing screech from the locomotive, and not so much as a howl from the platform. Now this may be popocratic, but it isn't right. We don't want to give any rash advice, but we shouldn't blame people who are so down-trodden that Mr. Bryan has no use for them if they should make the effort of their lives to get out from under the Juggernaut for a few minutes on November 3 and vote for somebody who doesn't bleed so much.—New York Tribune.
