He has, however, behaved personally with due courage and discretion, and officially with decency and in orderly form; and he has done more in that way for suffering Americans than was possible in any other way. His embarkation for his own country was marked by an exchange of courtesles between the con sulate and the paince. It is plain that there is swiftly coming an irrepressible crisis in Cuba; that the time approaches when the practical acknowledgment must be made by Spain of the fact that she has lost Cuba. Gen. Lee expects to return to Cuba, but he may not do so. Circumstances may be stronger than his purposes, for he will, beyond a doubt, be largely responsible for the course our government will. take relating to Cuban affairs. He will have ample time to inform the president thouroughly, as a civil officer and a military man, of the condition of Cuba. The business of the consulate is in the experienced and competent hands of the vice-consul, Mr. Joseph Springer, who, in the absence of superior, is always master of the situation.
