ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

With a certain class of people in this country there seems to be nothing so pleasant as the prospect of trouble with England. They are small people, it is true, and densely ignorant as a rule, but as politicians and newspaper men they are, for their size, remarkably noisy people.

Much of this is mere bluster, indulged because there is not the slightest prospect of its becoming anything else. It is indulged, where the writer or speaker has any sense or intelligence, for the sake of the Irish, or some other equally discriminating vote.

There is sometimes, on the other side of the water, the same sort of exhibition of ignorance, prejudice, and empty brag against this country. It finds its way into speech and print, where it grieves all sober people, and, as far as it goes, is fit to compare with its echo on this side.

How much this silly clatter on both sides of the water complicates the settlement of any diplomatic difficulty between the countries has been evidenced many times. The noise is so loud that each country sometimes takes it to express the sober conviction of the other. A "buncombe" speech in congress, a truculent article in the "Broad Ax of Liberty," are taken as expressing the sentiments of the American people. Some equally insane performance on the other side, in the way of speech or writing, is supposed to express the deliberate conviction of the governing classes, as we call them, of England about America.

Toward no country except England do American writers and speakers, of a certain calibre, express themselves so recklessly, impudently, and truculently, and toward no people except the American do English writers and speakers of the same grade of sense indulge in habitual depreciation, sneers, and falsehood. And yet between England and ourselves relations are closer than between any two countries on the globe. To no country is our friendship so important as it is to England. To no country is that of England so important as to ours. A thousand ties of interest and sympathy exist between the two nations. In many respects we are almost the same people. A war with England would do us as much harm as it would England. To neither country could it do any possible good—turn out as it might.

All this is well understood by all except the most ignorant, and yet it seems at times, as if the intention on both sides was to stir up the utmost possible ill-will between two countries whose highest interests depend upon being at peace with each other.

How little the bluster and brag of petty politicians and newspaper scribblers on this side amounts to as expressing American sentiment we here understand. They do not understand it in England. How little the same sort of thing amounts to in England is doubtless understood there, but not understood here. Each people takes the folly of the other for sober sense, and allows itself to be lashed periodically into excited wrath by what the other counts as absolute folly.

The English mistake arises from the fact that this is a republic, and the people are rulers. Every utterance throughout the country is taken to be the serious utterance of the rulers. The Englishman considers that in this country every declaration that can get itself made public is a sort of official declaration, because it is presumed to reflect the convictions of the people; and the people in this land are sovereigns.

We make a like mistake. England is a monarchy. England has an aristocracy, and to the ordinary American mind a monarchy and an aristocracy are powers that rule a country so completely that no sentiment can be entertained, or at least expressed, without the government's sanction. Whatever opinion about America can set itself made public in England is supposed to be the opinion of the "governing classes," or otherwise they would not let it be put forth. Thus each country, in the strangest way, misunderstands the other, and from that misunderstanding each contrives to keep the other in a chronic state of irritation.

It might help matters on both sides to remember that both countries are free, and are, in fact, the only free countries existing; they are, after all, essentially alike in constitution and law. One of the inconveniences of a free country is that it must have free speech and a free press; that it must allow anything not positively criminal to be spoken and published. This being so, an intolerable deal of folly, stupidity, insanity, and nonsense must be uttered in such a country. It is every man's right to utter his wisdom, but also to utter his folly; and on this last right your free denizen of a free country plants himself, and says his say.

England and the United States see fit each to allow this right. Indeed, in both countries it is considered quite a sacred right. It follows that all sorts of talk about England is tolerated here, as all sorts of talk about the United States is tolerated in England. But the American people would be very sorry to be held responsible for all that appears in the "Broad Ax of Liberty," or is belabored in the speeches of Hon. Elihu Program, in congress. And England also would be loth to claim responsibility for the "powerful leaders" of the penny paper, or the speeches of some big-headed member of parliament.

Both countries have not only the same blessing of free speech and a free press; they have also a common language. The compliments of each to the other do not need translating. The intercourse between the two countries, also, is as regular and frequent as though they were parts of the same. Whatever is said in one is instantly repeated in the other, and is readable by every man who cares to read. If we spoke different tongues, half the bitter things said or written here would never reach England, and English writers and speakers might sneer to their hearts' content at America, and we would sleep undisturbed. But as it is, we are two nations speaking the same tongue, and yet totally distinct, enough alike to feel every point of difference as a wrong, and enough unlike to make us know we are strangers; close enough to know whatever each says about the other, and having that respect for each other which makes hostile criticism bitter to the other.

Verily each other at so many points that the chances of jar and irritation are immensely multiplied. Were we utterly strange people, we would treat each other as strangers, expecting nothing else and be satisfied. But it is the fact that English opinion about America is the one opinion for which we naturally care, as American opinion about England is the opinion which there is reason to believe England is most concerned.

There is no remedy for this chronic condition of irritation except in the increasing good sense of both countries. Let America learn to value the happy utterance of a free press or platform in England as they value the same utterance at home, and let England understand the bluster and brag of America just as the same thing is understood there. In neither country are these utterances to be taken seriously. In neither do they represent the sentiment of the country. They are incidents in the freedom which rules in both lands; froth on the surface of the great calm deep beneath.

Two great nations, bound almost as closely as if they were one; bound by all bonds, for their own sake and for the world's sake to respect each other, and keep peace each with the other, will find, in time, that this is best done by laughing at a great deal which causes ill-feeling now. There has not been in more than half a century, and there is not likely to be for many more half centuries, any serious danger of rupture in the friendly relations of the two countries. If there were any chance whatever that irritating babble on either side would long ago have produced a rupture. As there is no such chance, it is simple nonsense to be laughed at, if one is in the mood; to be taken any way but seriously.

Perhaps it is the conviction, on both sides, of the fact that the relations between the two countries can never be other than friendly and peaceful that makes possible between America and England a kind of talk which would be vented in no other country if it were serious. For a moment, to mean anything serious. Everybody knows here that such is the case on this side of the water, and we will not be far wrong in inferring that it is the same on the other.

Mr. Isaac Horner, proprietor of the Burton House, Burton, W. V., and one of the most widely known men in the state, was cured of rheumatism after three years of suffering. He says: "I have not sufficient command of language to convey any idea of what I suffered, my physicians told me that nothing could be done for me and my friends were fully convinced that nothing but death would relieve me of my suffering. In June, 1894, Mr. Evans, then salesman for the Wheeling Drug Co., recommended Chamberlain's Pain Balm. At this time my foot and limb were swollen to more than double their normal size and it seemed to me my leg would burst, but soon after I began using the Pain Balm the swelling began to decrease, the pain to leave, and now I consider that I am entirely cured. For sale by Estes-Conn Drug Co."

Little Men and Women

We call them little men and little women, but they are neither. They have ideas and ways all their own. Fortunately they soon become fond of cod-liver oil, when it is given to them in the form of Scott's Emulsion. This is the most valuable remedy in existence for all the wasting diseases of early life. The poorly nourished, scrofulous child; the thin, weak, fretting child; the young child who does not grow; all take Scott's Emulsion without force or bribe. It seems as if they knew that this meant nourishment and growth for bones, muscles and nerves.

Book telling more about it, free. It won't pay to try a substitute for Scott's Emulsion with the children. They will "talk it" for nothing. For sale at 50c. and $1.00, by all druggists. SCOTT & BOWNE, New York.

THE NEW WHITE ROSE LEAGUE

A Society to Restore the Stuarts to the English Throne.

Americans are accustomed to regard with a certain amount of good-natured contempt the benighted people of monarchic-ridden Europe who accord their allegiance to the reigning kings and emperors of the Old World. This feeling is intensified in the case of those who persist in proclaiming themselves the subjects of more pretenders, such as, for instance, the Duke of Orleans and Prince Victor Bonaparte in France; Don Carlos in Spain; Dom Miguel in Portugal; the King of Naples, the Grand-Duke of Tuscany and the Duke of Parma in Italy; and the Duke of Cumberland in Great Britain. Nothing but laughter and ridicule, however, can be accorded to those eccentric individuals who attempt to array themselves beneath the banner of a pretender who does not pretend, and who, embarrassed and annoyed, rather than flattered by their homage, declines to grant to them any sort of recognition. And yet there are a number of foolish people of this kind who have formed themselves into a species of association, which they have endowed with the name of the League of the White Rose, branches of which have actually been organized in the United States, notably in Boston and in Philadelphia. The avowed aim of the White Rose League is to change the order of succession of the English crown, and to install Queen Victoria's daughter, a rather formidable job, it must be admitted. They claim that Queen Victoria is nothing but a usurper, and that the lawful sovereign of Great Britain by right of legitimate descent is the Archduchess Marie Theresa, wife of that Prince Louis of Bavaria who, as eldest of the old Prince Regent, is destined in course of time to ascend the throne of Bavaria.

THE JUNIOR BRANCH OF THE STUARTS.

The Archduchess in question is descended in a direct line from the daughter of Charles I, who married Philippe, Duke of Orleans. The last male representative of this line was the ex-Duke of Modena, who died in 1843, and the Archduchess Marie Theresa is the only child of his younger brother, Ferdinand. The senior line of the Stuarts came to an end with the death of King James II. The White Rose League in fact, in default of the senior branch, the junior branch of the Stuarts represented by the Archduchess comes next in line of succession. Queen Victoria, as far as ancestry is concerned, being descended from a more remote offshoot of the Stuart family.

While this is perfectly correct as far as mere ancestry is concerned, it must not be forgotten that the revolution in the seventeenth century and the so-called Act of Settlement changed the order of succession and vested the latter in the Hanoverian branch of the House of Stuart, of which Queen Victoria is the chief. How little importance the Archduchess Marie Theresa attaches to the pretensions put forward in her behalf by the White Rose League is shown by the fact that her eldest son, Prince Rupert, has been delegated to represent the reigning house of Bavaria at the Jubilee ceremony in London, and to convey to Queen Victoria on that occasion the homage and respect of his parents, of his grandfather, the regent, and, indeed, of the entire Kingdom of Bavaria.

While there is no doubt that from a strictly legal point of view the members of the White Rose League in Great Britain are technically guilty of treason in banding themselves together for the purpose of endeavoring to transfer the crown of Queen Victoria to a foreign royal personage who does not want it, yet on the other hand the league is so powerless to achieve anything, and so ludicrous in its behavior, that the Government has come to the conclusion that any attention accorded to these milk-and-water conspirators would merely give them the advertising for which they yearn, and that the best policy is to leave them alone, to be extinguished eventually by sheer ridicule.

A COLLECTION OF CRANKS.

In the league there are a few titled cranks and a few aristocrats with a screech loose, as the saying is, but the rank and file consists of people of the middle and lower middle classes, possessed of social aspirations but no sort of social standing; in a word, the kind of persons one would describe as gentled in contradiction to gentle. Herbert the public manifestations have taken the shape of depositing floral emblems at the foot of the statue of King Charles I, in Trafalgar Square, and at the tomb of Mary, Queen of Scots, in Westminster Abbey, on the anniversary of the days on which these respective monarchs lost their heads. They have likewise stamped their letters with a postage stamp of their own, bearing the head, not of Queen Victoria, but of Archduchess Marie Theresa, who is described on the stamp as "Queen Marie IV, D. G. Mag. Brit. et Hib. Regina." Of course the English postoffice does not recognize the stamp, so the White Rose League is obliged to get over this difficulty by putting its own stamp in the right-hand corner of the envelope, head upward, and pasting a regular stamp, bearing the effigy of "Lady Victoria," with her head downward.

The head of the association is a gentleman who styles himself Marquis of Kewligny, a title which, it is scarcely necessary to add, is to be found in no nobility annual, either English or foreign. One of the most prominent members is the Earl of Ashburham, a nobleman whose whose principal claim to distinction is his intimacy with the disreputable Don Carlos, and the exceedingly peculiar circumstances of his marriage. He is a man about fifty-three years of age, who has spent the major portion of his life abroad, has few or no friends in England, is renowned even on the Continent for his eccentricities, and after being on one occasion appointed lord-in-waiting to the Queen had his appointment cancelled by Her Majesty a week later.

Fifty Years Ago.

Who could imagine that this should be the place where, in eighteen ninety-three that white world-wide web of arch and dome... Should shadow the nation, polychrome... Here at the Fair was the prize conferred. On Ayer's Pills, by the world preferred. Chicago-like, they a record show. Since they started—50 years ago.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills

have, from the time of their preparation, been a continuous success with the public. And that means that Ayer's Pills accomplish what is promised for them; they cure where others fail. It was fitting, therefore, that the world-wide popularity of these pills should be recognized by the World's Fair medal of 1893—a fact which emphasizes the record: 50 Years of Cures.

THE STOMACH CANNOT BE FRIEGHTED.

With greater trash than a violent drastic purgative. True, such a medicine relieves constipation for the time, but at the expense of great injury to the intestinal canal, which it both inflames and weakens, thus unfitting it for the performance of its proper functions. Widely different is the action of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a tonic, stimulant which produces effects prompt, indeed, but never violent and enervating. The purity of its botanical ingredients, its unobtainable flavor, its genial influence upon the mind, and the thoroughness of its remedial action in cases of constipation, liver complaint, and dyspepsia, combine to render it the most desirable family specific. It increases both physical vigor and substance, tranquillizes and invigorates the nervous system, and gives an unexcelled relief to the food. A wineglass three times daily is about the average dose.

Victor Herbert, the cellist, is a grandson of Samuel Lover, the Irish novelist, and has recently received from his mother Lover's album with many sketches and personal letters from celebrities.

Sometimes it seems to weary woman that she must certainly give up. The simplest and easiest work becomes an almost insurmountable task. Nervousness, sleeplessness and pain harass her and she seems hardly worth the living. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was made for her. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery was made for her. The former is for the distinctly feminine, the other for her general system. Together they supply a scientific and successful course of treatment. The "Favorite Prescription" restores healthy, regular action to the organs distinctly feminine. It forces out all impurities, strengthens the tissues, allays inflammation. The "Medical Discovery" makes appetite, helps digestion, promotes assimilation, lifts out the hollows in cheeks and neck with good solid flesh and brings back the gladsome glow of girlhood.

Send 21 cents in one-cent stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., and receive Dr. Pierce's six page Common Sense Medical Adviser, illustrated.

Sir Walter Besant estimates that the living descendants of the Pilgrim fathers in the United States number about 15,000, although 10,000, he thinks, know the relationship.

THE OBJECTION NOT GOOD.

There are people who have objections to advertising matter in the columns of a newspaper. The ground of objection is that they do not want to read advertisements. Now this objection is not good, for, oftentimes these advertisements convey valuable information. For instance, how else would the traveling public learn of the excellent dining car service of the Wisconsin Central lines between St. Paul and Chicago, or the general comfort of traveling over this popular line. For particulars call on the nearest ticket agent or address J. C. Pond, G. P. A., Milwaukee, Wis., or Geo. S. Batty, General Agent, 248 Stark street, Portland, Or.

Ex-Senator Dubois and Senators Cannon and Pettibrew will sail July 2 for China and Japan, to study the financial question from the Oriental standpoint.

A. H. Patter, with E. C. Atkins & Co., Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "I have never before given a testimonial in my life. But I will say that for three years we have never been without Chamberlain's Colic and Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house, and my wife would as soon think of being without flour as a bottle of this Remedy in the summer season. We have used it with all three of our children and it has never failed to cure—not simply stop pain, but cure absolutely. It is all right, and anyone who tries it will find it so." For sale by Estes-Conn Drug Co.

Queen Victoria has twenty-five state carriages, which are kept in the coach house attached to Buckingham palace.

"There's no use in talking," says W. H. Broadwell, druggist, La Cyme, Kan., "Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy does me a good deal of good. It is the best medicine of my own preparation and those of others. I took a dose of Chamberlain's and it helped me, a second dose cured me. Carefully and conscientiously I can recommend it as the best thing on the market. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by Estes-Conn Drug Co.
