

BEET SUGARS FROM HOLLAND SHALL BE EXCLUDED FROM THE UNITED STATES BY TARIFF.

It is a Question of the Imposition of the Additional Duty Under the Dingley Bill—The Department is Doubt.

Washington, Sept. 2.—The question of whether beet sugars exported from Holland to the United States should be practically excluded from this country by the imposition of an additional duty equivalent to the bounty paid by the Dutch government, is one which the treasury department will have to decide in the near future.

It has been assumed that the new Dutch sugar law which went into effect recently provided for an export bounty, but this seems to be open to considerable doubt.

A draft of this law has been forwarded by the minister at The Hague. The treasury officials have not yet examined it carefully enough to decide whether it provides any direct way for a bounty on exportation.

It is doubtful whether this can be construed to be a bounty or grant upon the exportation of sugar and this may lead to a decision that no additional duties can be levied on Dutch sugar on account of the bounty.
