GULNARE'S RUSE.

An old Arab some 60 years of age, feeling something like King David in his anriquity, took a young damsel to his heart and home. The old story of 16 and 60, with a dashing young gallant of 25 between, again ensued, with the usual con-sequences. Poor Guinare was locked up in her harem and guarded by her tyrant

One day Abdallah-ibn-Jusuf brought ome a fine watermelon wherewith to regale himself and his fair bride and then returned to his business, whatever it might be. In the meantime Guinare sat at her lattice window, her "jalousle," and pined

Guinare shrucked. Abdallah stormed statts, and raved, till at last, breaking from her husband's grasp, Gulnare rushed into DR. JAY TUTTLE, the street and wonded her steps to her mother's house. Here she explained how her husband had sundenly gone mad and described to them the whole scene that had just passed. Abdallah himself more appeared in a towering fury to bring his wife back, but on being asked whether rine hospital service, he really had believed and said there were fish in the toolen, and answering in the affirmative, his wife's relatives thought it high time they should be separated, and all the disputants adjourned to the "shum's" to hear ble decision. Here Abdullah stated his case, having first, in the full consciousness of his good faith, accepted the wager of a fine steed which the perfidious Golmare had offered him, and related all that had passed between him and his wife.

"And dost thou really affirm that thy melon contained these 12 fishes thou speakest about? "V'Allah! V'Allah! I am speaking ?

the truth! Thereupon followed a long discussion, some arguing for a possibility of the mir. acle, others denying it in toto, asserting that it was an optical defusion-a kind of mirage, in fact-till at length one wise man pronounced his opinion that this was a minor question, because if the man in lusion he was still laboring under one and was therefore of unsound mind. If, on the other hand, he really believed in what was evident impossibility, he was a luna tic all the more. Lastly, supposing, for the sake of argument, there had been these 12 fish, these transformed afrites, what could have become of them? It was clear there had never been any fish in the melon. Abdallah thereupen began to vociferat still more loudly than before and swore in his senile rage that he would be avenged on the woman who thus dared to triff
