a decidedly carnest style, are pleasant! readable and instructive. The writer foresaw the dawning of a new era for the territory so long underrated by people who judged before investigating its possible resources and became deeply interested in the district at the time of the purchase and resolved some time to visit When the opportunity offered his mind was prepared to take a comprehensive and impartial view of Alaska, both in its natural and political possibilities. The variety and splendor of its scenery fascinated him, while he was filled with commiseration for its neglected condition He has used his our in a sincere et deavor to arouse political as well as so cial thoughtfulness concerning it in all its peculiar and valuable qualities, and earnestly advocates prompt and careful egislation for its government and protection.
