INDIAN CHARACTER CANNOT BE DEPENDED UPON. General Bacon Says They Can Fight and Are the Same Treacherous Foe as of Old.

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—As an abstract proposition the Indians want no more fighting. They have had enough to last for some time in the Bear Lake campaign just over.

This was the answer General John M. Bacon, the veteran Indian fighter, who commanded the United States troops in the recent Indian outbreak in Minnesota.

"I want to say one word," continued General Bacon, "about the so-called raw recruit. Out of the 71 men who were with me in the battle of October 5, 58 were enlisted during the middle of last summer, but their conduct was admirable."

"The war-painted Indian of today is the same cruel and treacherous foe of the plains of years ago. He is not in battle to be killed—such an idea is unpleasant to him. He is in it to kill the other fellow in any way he can."
