GOVERNOR ASKS FOR TROOPS

The Sheriff Powerless and an Outbreak is Feared—Negroes Massed Outside the City.

ATLANTA, Aug. 25.—There is a renewal of race trouble at Darien, Ga., and Governor Candler has again been asked to send troops there to prevent an outbreak. A few days ago, Henry Dalegat, was arrested at Darien on a charge of assault. Today Joseph Townshend was killed and Octavius Hopkins wounded by John Dalegat, whom they were trying to arrest. The sheriff wired Governor Candler today saying the situation was critical.

A conference was held tonight between Sheriff Blount, the military officials and the citizens committee and it was decided to take decisive action at daylight against the negroes who are massed in Dealalls swamp, 12 miles from the city.

The militia are ready and a Liberty county troop will start from Hainesville for Darien at 2 o'clock. The McIntosh dragons are at the armory here. The citizens will move from Darien.

THE JUDGES ARE PARTIAL

The Court Martial Shows Strong Anti-Dreyfus Feeling.

TESTIMONY OF YESTERDAY

De Clam's Illness Will Be Investigated at the Request of Labor—Scenes in Court.

RENNES, Aug. 25.—At the opening of today's session of the Dreyfus court-martial, which occurred without any extraordinary incident, the clerk of the court read a medical certificate signed by two unknown doctors, declaring it was impossible for De Clam to leave his bed to come to Rennes and testify. Labor asked Colonel Jouanste to instruct two well-known medical men to examine De Clam, but Colonel Jouanste refused.

Rowland Strong, an English newspaper man, then deposed to the fact that Esterhazy confessed to him he wrote the famous bordereau. The next witness was M. Gobert, an expert of the Bank of France, who can claim the honor of being the first man in France to have declared in favor of Dreyfus. He reported, on examination of the documents in the case, that Esterhazy, not Dreyfus, wrote the bordereau. The witness opened his deposition with a brief personal statement, protesting against being characterized as being "a doubtful expert" by the military party. "But," he added, in tones of profound pity, and turning towards Dreyfus, "I have no right to complain and am silent when I see before me the unfortunate man who sits there."

A murmur of approval from the audience greeted these words of sympathy. Gobert then repeated the evidence he had given before the court of cassation. He gave the testimony in a clear, convincing manner, and was most emphatic in attributing the bordereau to Esterhazy. Answering the questions of the judges, Gobert declared his conviction the bordereau was written in a running, natural hand, and said there was no tracing or other trickery. General Gonz asked to be confronted with Gobert, and put a number of questions, over one or two of which the witness stumbled, to the infinite satisfaction of the military witnesses, who smiled and exchanged joyful glances.

General Gonz, it appears, was greatly enraged when he learned of the result of Gobert's examination of the bordereau and visited the expert repeatedly. The latter always insisted on learning the name of the suspect.

"It was not proper," said Gobert, "for me to accuse any one without being perfectly cognizant of the facts, especially in circumstances of so grave a nature." It was after Gobert had refused to incriminate Dreyfus that Bertillon was entrusted with the examination of the bordereau and after a few hours' study, Bertillon positively attributed the bordereau to Dreyfus. Gobert suggested that the judges compare the bordereau with the letter admitted to be Esterhazy's handwriting and dated August 1894, with the documents written by the prisoner. "You will then, unmistakably recognize," said Gobert, "that the bordereau is in Esterhazy's handwriting and not in the handwriting of Dreyfus." (Great sensation.)

Henri Weil, a former officer in the headquarters staff was then called, but was absent and his deposition was read. Weil's statement in substance was that Esterhazy told him in 1894 that Dreyfus was innocent, but that this would not prevent his conviction because he was a Jew.

Bertillon, the noted anthropometrist, was called as the next witness. Bertillon requested permission to bring in his diagrams and papers. The request was granted and Bertillon retired for a moment, returning at the head of a squad composed of an infantry sergeant and four privates, all staggering under the weight of immense leather satchels, bulging with documents, charts, etc., which they deposited on the stage, as a roar of laughter echoed throughout the court. Even the judges were unable to suppress a smile as they gazed on Bertillon's stage properties, strewn over half the platform.

The witness began by saying only intelligent men could follow his explanations. Bertillon commenced his deposition at 8:30. It occupied the whole of this session and will perhaps occupy a good part of tomorrow's session. The courtrooms presented a curious scene while Bertillon, whom the Dreyfusards, in their most indolgent moments, describe as a "dangerous maniac," spent the three remaining hours of the ses-
