SAFE HOME CANNING RULE IS ANNOUNCED BY O. A. C.

New Time-Table of Federal and State Departments Supersedes All Former Recommendations.

"Safe home canning requires careful attention to every step in the process."

This is the rule announced by the O. A. C. extension service in putting out a bulletin with succinct directions for each step, on information supplied by the federal bureau of home economics and approved by the horticultural products department of the college.

The new time tables for processing supercedes all former recommendations and tables published by the state and the federal departments on home canning. They give the safe time for Oregon fruits and small fruits, and for most vegetables.

Only the clean, sound and fresh produce is to be used for canning. It should be taken perfectly within two hours after harvesting and thoroughly washed as for cooking. Every bit of soil is to go, as it may carry dangerous bacteria hard to kill.

The fruits and vegetables are then given a short pre-cooking. Full directions for processing follow the general instruction. Bulletin may be obtained by applying to the college at Corvallis.

Dry Wheat Treatment Wins

The new dry method of treating seed wheat for protection against stinking smut has been made so rapid progress in Oregon that growers are expected to purchase some 60,000 pounds of copper carbonate dust for the 1924 planting. The amount used last year was estimated at 45,000 pounds by E. R. Jackson, extension crop specialist who is in close touch with the field situation. Success in getting a stand with the dust-treated grain, so pronounced last year, may lead even more farmers than at first might be expected to substitute the liquid method for the dry this year.

Samples have been sent to plant pathologists at Corvallis and every effort is being made to ascertain what is the cause and remedy it.
