YOU THINK YOU'LL QUIT?

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

VOU think you'll quit. You do not

The way they speak to people there You hope another job to strike, Where ev'ryone is always fair. The labor, too, is rather light;

And yet you'd like another sort, A place that's just exactly right.

That other job you had before Was not so bad, nor near as bad As once it seemed. What made you

Was all the business that they had They paid you more then others would, But often made you work at night; And so you left the place for good To look for one exactly right.

You have another move in mind; Another job you want to get, place of quite another kind From any you have had as yet, With not so very much to do,

Good pay, short hours, and lots of . light. And where they're always nice to you, A place that's just exactly right,

And yet, my boy, my girl, my man, From job to job we often go, Yet seldom find, and seldom can, These Paradises here below.

There's very often something wrong, I guess, with ev'ry job in sight; Perhaps we'll have to get along With one that's not exactly right.

Perhaps the house has troubles, too, The chief has worries, too, no doubt.

Perhaps there's something wrong with you And me we never thought about,

We're not entirely perfect, no, To customers perhaps polite; They keep us on the pay roll, though, Although we're not exactly right.

------"LAST HUMAN FRAILTY"

"I OFTEN think," said a New England minister, "that the last human frailty which Christian religion will succeed in conquering will be the tendency to gossip."

Well, you know, for myself, I rather hope it will be.

I am a great believer in gossip. Of course, I can quits understand the minister's feeling rather badly about it, because it seems that one of his dearly beloved congregation has circulated the false rumor that the reverend gentleman's good lady was a servant before her marriage.

"In the ordinary way, in view of its grave possibilities of evil, gossip should be altogether ignored, but now and then there are specimens of the more harmless variety that are so regiy bu

This also the minister.

I don't lay any claims to humor myself, which perhaps explains why I can't see the "refreshingly funny" point about having your wife mistaken for an ex-servant.

I know one or two domestics who would make darn good ministeresses. And lots of ministeresses whom I Take that next job to your can't think would be good for anything

I agree with the gentleman, however, that a considerable amount of catty, dangerous, and Ill-considered gossip should be ignored.

But I don't want any of us to lose our delight in or taste for it. A wholesome fear of our neighbors' gossiping tongues has kept not a few of us to the stricter paths of rectitude. Where would we be, I wonder, if It were not for this dread of being "talked about," this natural sensitiveness to the words of scorn and ridi-
