President Calvin Coolidge

The great opportunity of Calvin Coolidge as the thirtieth president of the United States has just come.

On the surface, it looks promising. He has the people behind him. He has the support of a majority in both houses of Congress where his party has strengthened itself by doing away with the dissenters. The important war problems have been solved, the unrest which followed is beginning to subside and the field seems clear for a successful administration.

There is much work to be done in the next four years in which the President must take the initiative. It rests upon him to arouse and hold public interest in the policies which he advocates, until the people are convinced that he is right and with their conviction, he will triumph.

That the people will desert him is to be expected and with those who forsake him, others will rise up in his defense. With the following that he has, and with his deliberate, clear minded thinking, Calvin Coolidge will do his best to live up to his predecessor's proclamation that "Government of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Does Advertising Pay?

We once heard of a merchant who said that he could not afford to advertise. On the other hand, we heard another merchant say that he could not afford not to advertise. The live wire is the one who gets out and gets what he is out after. If it is trade, he gets it and does it by letting the other fellow know what it is that he has for sale. The one who does not advertise, sits at home and curses the mail order houses, their methods and everything in general. Does he ever stop to think that the mail order house in the biggest advertising business there is? Their companies spend thousands of dollars for catalogues, bargain sheets and newspaper ads, every year. When business is slack, the wide awake business man sends out "Bargain Sheets," to be posted, and left from door to door. If he has a special reduction in price on any article, he wants everyone to know about it and take advantage of it. The economical housewife watches the bargain counters and if it were not for the advertising of the wide-awake business man, she could not take advantage of the low prices. Another thing, the wide awake business man, the advertiser, is the popular man of the town. He is the one who is in demand. If the citizens want anything to go through, he is the one who makes it possible, and through advertising. If it is a big show he sponsors—he advertises and lets everyone know about it. While he is making it a success, the man who does not advertise sits in his shop, and wonders why business does not pick up and blames the other fellow for taking his trade away from him.
