SILENT ON GERMAN RESULT

U. S. Officials Give No Formal Opinion — Others Differ Widely.

Washington, D. C.—The decisive victory of Field Marshal von Hindenburg in Germany's first election of a president by popular vote was the dominating topic of discussion Monday throughout Washington official life. Views expressed as to the significance to be attached to the action of the German people in having conferred the presidency upon their national war hero, ranged from the extreme French attitude that it was the unmasking of militarism in Germany, to the German construction that it was a decisive defeat for communism rather than a victory for the reactionary political faction.

Between these two extremes lay the views of British, Italian and American observers with the impression among them that a month or two must elapse after the inauguration of the president-elect before it will be possible to forecast accurately the effect of his election upon Europe's already complicated political and economic problems.

American opinion with relation to the German election continued for the most part to be closely screened behind the policy of silence that has been observed by Washington officials throughout. No word bearing any resemblance to formal comment was available from any official or even diplomatic quarter. Despite these restrictions, however, it was possible to form accurate impressions as to how the election was viewed in each national circle in Washington.

Treasury officials saw no economic threat in the election result, viewing the choice of Von Hindenburg as representing a reaction and therefore as indicating a tendency toward conservatism among the majority of the German people.

The French view is frankly pessimistic. It holds that in rolling up a decisive majority for the field marshal, the German people have thrown aside any intent to conceal what the French regard as their basic desire that Germany be restored to a condition of the military power that would permit enforcement of its will upon other continental nations. The election was construed as justifying all of the doubts France has entertained as to the purposes and ambitions of her German neighbors and to prove that the drastic military precautions and measures she has urged since the signing of the armistice against the more moderate judgment of her allies were fully warranted.

Man's Origin Held Proved.

Simla, India.—It has been definitely established that man originated from anthropoid apes, according to an opinion expressed here Monday by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka of Washington, D. C., who has headed expeditions of the United States National Museum of Anthropology to many parts of the world. He is here to examine the discovery recently made of five different species of fossils of anthropoid apes in the Shivalk hills.

Addressing a representative gathering at the residence of Sir Frederick Whyte, president of the legislative assembly of India, Dr. Hrdlicka urged India seriously to undertake researches in the Shivalk hills, which, he said, might contain important evidence concerning the origin of the human race.

He expressed the belief that, previous researches already have shown definitely that all human races, including African negroes and whites, had the same origin from anthropoid apes, but that differences in subsequent intellectual development had the later racial differences.

GERMANS ELECT VON HINDERBURG

Former Field Marshal Chosen for President.

PLURALITY IS 845,000

Dr. Marx Gets Second Place in First Popular Vote of Republic — Was War Hero.

Berlin.—The people of Germany have rallied to the banner of Field Marshal von Hindenburg and elected him president of the republic. He is the first president of Germany to be elected by popular ballot. He was nominated by the nationalist-conservative bloc to replace Dr. Karl Jarres, who failed of election in the first balloting on March 29.

His opponent was Dr. Wilhelm Marx, candidate of the republican bloc, adherents of the Weimar coalition, composed of centrists, socialists and democrats. The third candidate was Ernest Thaelmann, communist.

Von Hindenburg triumphed in his race for the presidency with a plurality close to 845,000.

The official provisional figures of the presidential election follow:

Von Hindenburg, 14,639,399; Marx, 13,752,640; Thaelmann, 1,931,591. Votes declared invalid, 21,910. Total, 30,345,540.

Von Hindenburg comes to the chair once occupied by Friedrich Ebert who was chosen president by the national assembly at Weimar in February, 1919, and who died in Berlin in February, 1925.

Veneration for the Prussian royal house, implicit faith in God, unbounded enthusiasm for the military profession and a consuming love for the fatherland—these are the characteristics of Field Marshal General Paul Von Beneckendorf und Hindenburg, elected president of the German republic as standard-bearer of the nationalist parties, as they are revealed in his autobiography, "Aus Meinem Leben," published in 1920, and of the autobiography, "Feldmarschall Von Hindenburg," written by his brother Bernhard and published in 1916.

One is taken back to the days when Germany still believed in the divine rights of kings, when the profession of arms was the most sacred of callings, and when the German paraphrase of "My country, right or wrong," had not yet given place to the motto "My country, when right to be kept right, when wrong to be set right."

But in later years, and particularly since entering upon the campaign which has had as its outcome his elevation to the presidency, the field marshal has included in his ideals unity of the German people, peace and good will towards all humanity and still a place in the sun for the fatherland.

SCHOOL DAYS

ASTOLD BY Irvin S. Cobb

A BARGAIN WAS DRIVEN

IN THE old days a newspaper writer in Chicago felt he to a pass good for four on the opening day at one of the racetracks. He invited three friends to accompany him. They made the trip in a decrepit automobile of ancient vintage which the journalist had acquired a few days earlier in part payment of a debt.

At the gate a ticket taker examined their credentials and permitted the party to drive in. They were just inside the fence when the attendant remembered he had forgotten to collect for parking space.

"Hey! Wait a minute!" he called, and our hero halted the machine. "It's one dollar for the car," said the man.

"How's that?" inquired the driver. "One dollar for the car."

"Gimme the dollar," said the journalist, "the car is yours!"

Old-Fashioned Puddings

IN ALMOST any family there will be found some left-over bread which cannot be thrown away and the problem of working it into the menu must be thought out. Here are a few suggestions for desserts using bread or crumbs as a basis:

Cherry Pudding.

Mix one cupful of sifted bread crumbs, one cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder together. Rub in four tablespoonfuls of butter, add a well-beaten egg and one-half cupful of milk, mix all together. Sprinkle a little flour on one cupful of pitted cherries; if canned, drain them and add to the batter. Bake a half hour and serve with a hot vanilla sauce.

Vanilla Sauce.

Mix one tablespoonful of cornstarch with four tablespoonfuls of sugar and a little salt, then pour one cupful of boiling water over the dry mixture and cook until thickened and the starch taste is removed. Beat an egg yolk and the mixture after cooling slightly, add one teaspoonful of vanilla, a teaspoonful of butter and serve.

Spiced Graham Pudding.

Take half a loaf of stale graham bread before it gets too dry and cut off all the hard crust. Press seeded raisins into the bread to cover the entire surface. Make a custard mixture of two cupfuls of cold milk, two eggs, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of mixed spices and one-fourth teaspoonful of nutmeg. Pour in the milk and soak until the bread has entirely absorbed it, turning occasionally to reach all sides. Put into a buttered mold or covered pan and steam one hour. Serve with maple sauce.

Maple Sauce.

Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half cupful of soft maple sugar or brown sugar with one-fourth teaspoonful of maple extract and a few drops of lemon juice. Set in a cool place to harden before using.

Toast Pudding.

Prepare French toast by dipping bread into egg thickened with a tablespoonful of milk, then fry brown in butter. Serve with raisin sauce.

Raisin Sauce.

Boil one and one-half cupfuls of water and one-third cupful of raisins fifteen minutes, add one-fourth cupful of brown sugar and boil fifteen minutes longer. Thicken with a teaspoonful of
