Commenting on the debt situation the Messaggero asks at what rate of exchange should Italy be called on to repay her debts. The French government has decided to send a mission to the United States with the object of reaching an agreement with the American debt funding commission relative to payment of France's debt. The plan was approved by the council of ministers Friday, and it is taken for granted assent will be given by the cabinet.

The United States is being violently attacked by the Brussels newspapers in a series of editorials for "cornering Belgium" as the paper allege, "into recognizing the war debt in order to float a $100,000,000 loan" and also for "trying to collect a debt which the Belgians expected to be charged to Germany under the Versailles treaty."

Both men were in a serious condition due to their long exposure and insufficient nourishment. Mason and Bowman said they were set upon by five hooded men, carried off and chained to a tree. Each night they were blindfolded and removed to another place, they stated. This, it is believed, prevented their discovery.

BELGIANS TALK WAR DEBTS

Settlement Outlook Held Bright by Washington Officials.

Washington, D. C.—Indications were given Monday that the treasury anticipates little difficulty in arriving at a funding settlement on the Belgian debt. Acting Secretary Winston of the treasury, as secretary of the American debt commission, has reserved from August 5 to August 16 in which to talk with the Belgian commission and has notified the French ambassador here that the commission could meet with the French representatives in a funding conversation either before or after the period set aside for the Belgians.

It now appears that the debt commission officials have private advices warranting the belief that the Paris commission will come to Washington ahead of the time which has been indicated in press reports.

The earliest date on which the French has been expected was in September, but the announcement that the embassy here had been informed of the program of meetings with Secretary Mellon, the chairman, Mr. Winston and other members of the commission now here and the time they will be available gave rise to the belief that other information was in the hands of the treasury. Questions on this phase of the debt situation were neither affirmed nor denied.

Officials concerned with the debt problem are much more optimistic now about the probable results of their efforts to get the foreign powers to act on the debts. While none of them believe that all the debts can be worked out in funding settlements immediately, it was evident that they believed the Belgian move was sincere and that they expected to reach an agreement with that nation in a short series of conversations. The officials here, however, denied having any information as to the character of the terms to be proposed by the Belgians, but were convinced that a few talks with them would clarify any differences that may be found to exist.

CONFLICT FUTILE, SAYS PRESIDENT

Peace Covenants Held Hope of Europe.

PLEDGE U. S. SUPPORT

Mr. Coolidge, on Historic Cambridge, Commons, Urges Nations to Get Together.

Cambridge, Mass.—Near the spot where George Washington took command of the continental army, President Coolidge called on the nations of Europe Friday to enter into mutual covenants for their mutual security, pledging the moral support of the American government if they do so.

"While our own country should refrain from making political commitments where it does not have political interests," he declared, "such covenants would always have the moral support of our government and could not fail to have the commendation of the public opinion of the world.

"Such a course would be sure to endow the participating nations with an abundant material and spiritual reward. On what other basis can there be any encouragement for a disposition to attempt to finance a revival of Europe."

The president's address, delivered on historic Cambridge commons, was the feature of the celebration of the 150th anniversary of the day Washington assumed command of the continental troops.

After tracing Washington's achievements and praising his character and services, Mr. Coolidge asserted that the nation's first president had "demonstrated by his example and our country has demonstrated by experience that more progress can be made by competition than conflict.

"To agree quickly with our adversary always pays," he added, continuing: "I want to see America assume a leadership among the nations in the reliance upon the good faith of mankind. I do not see how civilization can expect permanent progress on any other theory.

"If the people of the old world are mutually distrustful of each other, let them enter into mutual covenants for their mutual security, and when such covenants have been made let them be solemnly observed, no matter what the sacrifice.

"They have settled the far more difficult problems of reparations; they are in process of funding their debts to us; why can't they agree on permanent terms of peace and reestablish international faith and credit?"

"If there be differences which cannot be adjusted at the moment, if there be conditions which cannot be foreseen, let them be resolved into the future by methods of arbitration and by methods of arbitration and by the forms of judicial determination.

"The world has tried war with force and has utterly failed. The only hope of success lies in peace and justice. No other principle conforms to the teachings of Washington; no other standard is worthy of the spirit of America; no other course makes so much promise for the regeneration of the world."

The president, in a touring car with the top down, headed a lengthy parade through cheering lanes of people.

In the reviewing stand Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge were joined by Governor Fuller of Massachusetts, Mayor Quinn of Cambridge and Mayor Curley of Boston.

One of the 50 bands participating played "Lord Geoffrey Amberst," the school song of the president's alma mater. This brought a smile from the president.

The president went from the reviewing stand through a tremendous press of people who swarmed to get a glimpse of him, to the nearby speakers' stand. He was introduced by Mayor Quinn after a short pageant commemorative of the event being celebrated.

Immediately after his address the president returned to Swampscott.

STRANGE HUMAN TRAITS

IF A MAN strolling on the sidewalk espies the shell of a nut, the chance may be that he will turn aside to step upon it that he may hear it crunch beneath his weight.

A vague pleasure comes to him as the shell cracks and gives way to the pressure of his foot; an odd consciousness of power which for the moment tickles his pride and possibly causes him to explain to himself as did little Jack Horner in the nursery rhymes, "Oh what a big man am I!"

From the time of Herod, this type of man has had much to do with the unhappiness of the world, its sobs and tears, its divorces, its industrial strifes and wars. It is this sort of man that likes to oppress, to wield his fists and ply the whips.

He delights to humiliate men by compelling them to submit to his arrogance and presumptuous mastery.

He has no sympathy for the men and women whose backs are bent under burdens, who uncomplainingly are doing the world's work, building homes, rearing families, planting trees, tilling the soil, guiding the looms and forging steel.

Being the embodiment of selfishness, dictatorial in all his communications and dealings with his fellow kin, he has no hesitancy in crushing beneath his hard, cruel heel, everything and everybody that comes in his way.

He does not stop to consider that he, too, in all probability may meet a similar fate. That as he measures it, will in the day of final reckoning be measured unto him, even to the last mite.

He is too busy and finds too much satisfaction and profit in crunching the shells on the sidewalk and, incidentally, in crushing hearts and wrecking lives.

The little fellows must seek cover when he comes strutting down the street, else he may turn suddenly aside when he meets them to step upon them, simply to hear the delightful crunch!

Like a hawk, he is ever watching for prey, ever ready to tear and destroy, that he may be better fed, become more powerful and more generally feared.

If a boy or girl should show signs of developing these strange human traits, see to it that he or she is shown the error and led away from it with utmost haste.

THE YOUNG LADY ACROSS THE WAY

The young lady across the way says lyching never will be blotted out until mob law is strictly enforced.

GENERAL PERSHING

GENERAL JOHN JOSEPH PERSHING, military hero of both the United States and Europe, was born September 13, 1860, in Linn county, Missouri. He was rather poor, as a boy, with an intense ambition to "do something." This led him to take the competitive examinations for West Point, from which he graduated when he was twenty-six.

Few men have had careers where so much tragic misfortune has gone hand in hand with such brilliant success. When he was embarking for work in the Philippine and Moro campaigns, he received word of the death of his mother. He was no sooner started on his honeymoon than he had a cable to join Kuroki's army in Manchuria. And, as he was starting out after Villa, in Mexico, he heard of the tragic death of his wife and three of his four little children in the fire at the Presidio, in California.

General Pershing first served in various Indian campaigns then in the Santiago campaign, then in the Philippines and against the Moros, (whose language, incidentally, he learned). He was sent in pursuit of Villa, and when it became necessary to choose a leader of our expeditionary forces, he was the man sent. He has a face that seems stern in repose, like the faces of most military leaders, but with a quick, warm smile that wipes out both the stern expression and the hint of sadness around the eyes. He has a genius for taking desired military positions with little or no loss of men.

WHO SAID

"Force is all-conquering, but its victories are shortlived."

IT WAS the realization of the idea here expressed that impelled Abraham Lincoln to decide upon a plan of reconstruction which had for its purpose the conciliation of the southern states, following the Civil war. His plan—which, had it been followed, would have saved the nation those terrible days which came after the war of secession—was neglected, however, and partisan politicians substituted their own plan when the assassin's bullet had laid the great President low.

Lincoln realized that force—war—had brought victory to the North, but he realized also that the victory would be shortlived if it were not followed up with a policy of generosity and fairness which would clinch the success achieved on the battlefield. But his policy was not followed and the United States experienced dark days following the great strife.

Abraham Lincoln, as every lad knows, was a poor boy and the son of poor, almost illiterate parents. The story of how this lad, in the face of apparently insurmountable difficulties, achieved success and secured a knowledge of English which made it possible for him to write one of the greatest bits of literature ever known to the world—the Gettysburg address—reads like a fairy story.

Lincoln was born February 12, 1809, and died in Ford's theater, Washington, by the hand of an assassin—John Wilkes Booth, the actor—April 14, 1865. His early life was spent on the farm and his wonderful physique, which enabled him to stand the strain of four years of war, was developed through the hard work of his early life. He was elected to the presidency in 1860 and again in 1864.

Throughout his administration Lincoln adhered to a policy of abolition, but made it second to his determination to preserve the union.—Wayne D. Mc Murray.
