The Social Realm

Congregational Meeting The annual congregational meeting of the Presbyterian church of this city will take place in the local church parlors tomorrow, at which all the members of the church and congregation are expected to be present. These dinners have become so noted, that, like the traditional Sunday school picnic, all who can claim to be Presbyterians at this time are glad to do so. An invitation is especially extended to all newcomers who are affiliated with this denomination, and who wish to become acquainted with the regular congregation, the members of which are urged to bring well filled baskets so that all will have plenty to eat. This annual dinner is simply a social affair and is strictly confined to the members of the congregation. The various reports of the church for the year will be given at this time and all business coming up at this time will be transacted at the congregational meeting following the dinner.

Grace and Beauty by Priscilla Dean

Value of Proper Poise I sometimes wonder, when I see people with these unlovely, ungraceful and unhealthy defects, if they have never been taught the value of proper poise. Surely everyone knows that a person who stands, walks and sits correctly is able to do much more with less fatigue than if the body is put to unnecessary strain by being out of plumb.

Grace as well as beauty can be acquired without expense in the home. If you want to take a course in home training to improve your carriage begin by measuring yourself against the edge of a door. If the inside of the ankle bone, the tip of the hip, and the tip of the shoulder are placed touching the edge of the door, an erect position will be assumed. Should this seem difficult or awkward it is because one has been in the habit of standing badly. By bringing oneself to the proper position a dozen times a day and walking with the spine erect, round shoulders will be overcome. It is surprising how much can be accomplished in only one month of practice.

"Sway back" is the term applied when the abdomen is thrust forward and the shoulders back. No woman can be graceful nor wear her clothes well who has that posture. Any tendency to sway back or round shoulders should be corrected promptly.

Once such habits are well acquired long and patient training will be necessary to overcome

WHY IS THE GUARANTEE?

Many car owners today are being attracted by long time guarantees, when they buy accessories, but the wise motorist will stop to consider whether he wants to buy a guarantee or an article of dependable merchandise. More and more, the American motorist is coming to regard the long guarantee with a bit of suspicion. "If this article is made right in the first place," he says, "and the manufacturer is sincere in his desire to protect his good reputation, why should it be necessary for him to shout his guarantee from the housetops or parade it in front of me in this effort to sell me his product?"

Such reasoning is perfectly logical. Any manufacturer knows when he advertises his product, that he is making his name familiar to thousands of prospective customers. He spends a goodly number of dollars annually to do this, and to get value received from this expenditure, his product must live up to all that he says about it in his advertising. A fair guarantee on motor car accessories is practically impossible, because the service which any article can provide depends very largely upon the care which the owner gives it. Any guarantee for a specified length of time or specified amount of service must necessarily be based on averages. For this reason, the careful man is made to pay for the acts of the careless man.

Take tires as a familiar example. Two tires of the same make and of same quality throughout will be sold to two men under definite mileage guarantee. This mileage guarantee is based on the average mileage of these tires in the hands of all users. One of these tires may go to a motorist, who never gives a thought to his tires until they are flat. He runs them under inflated either because he does not know the pressure in them or he is too lazy to find out. He rides blithely in the street car tracks or scrapes along the curbing simply because he is careless. The man who buys the other tire gives it a fair show to live up to its reputation. He gauges his tires properly, drives where he should and as he should, watches the little cuts and repairs them before they get worse. That man gets real mileage from his tires but in the long run, he pays for the guarantee given to his more careless brother.

Another striking example is storage batteries. The average storage battery will give a good service if it is given good care. The best battery made will not last its full life-time, if it is abused and ignored. The battery which is allowed to become dry or is over-worked or is frozen or overheated must necessarily give up the ghost earlier than one which has had a fair chance to make good. The specified guarantee on a storage battery does the motorist not one whit of good if it won't start his car in an emergency. You cannot crank a car with a guarantee any more than you can inflate a tire and get home on it with a mileage guarantee.

The wise motorist who believes in the principles of "Safety First" will buy his tires or his storage batteries of a concern whose only guarantee is that he must be satisfied. Such a manufacturer has a reputation to maintain and protect and he will use his last dollar to do this. Usually, long battery guarantees are simply selling points and because of the peculiar circumstances surrounding a storage battery, it is almost impossible for the average motorist to live up to the many conditions with which his guarantee is hedged about. The safest rule to follow is to buy a tire or a storage battery with a reputation and not buy a guarantee.

This does not mean we will not be glad to accommodate you and give you a reasonable credit on lumber, but for wood it means cash.
