"Always we kept moving, summer or winter. We never remained more than two weeks in one cabin which would shelter us. We ranged in the mountains around Indian creek and the Clearwater country, and kept high up in the Siskiyous except in winter, when the snows were terribly deep. We never tried prospecting; it took all our time trying to keep alive. It was always a case of trying to ger food. We killed and ate deer and bear and grouse. We trailed wild bees to their trees for honey and we ate berries. A few times we got a little coffee from some store in a little settlement, but
