HARDING EXPECTING LARGE COAST VOTE BITTER FIGHT TO CONTROL U. S. SENATE

PACIFIC COAST IS SAFE

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 2.—The majority of the states west of the Rocky mountains are expected by western political observers to be found in the republican column after today's votes are counted. California, Oregon and Washington, these dopesters figure, will express a preference for Harding. Nevada and Arizona will probably go for Cox. Montana is viewed as a "close" state, but most likely to give here electoral votes to the republican standard bearer. Idaho is expected to follow the lead of Senator Borah into the Harding camp.

California two months ago, would have been classed as doubtful, but recent utterances of Senator Johnson, and an intensive campaign are believed to have swung the state into line for the G. O. P. leader, despite his peculiar performance of two years ago.

Not only is the Pacific coast expected to lean toward the republican presidential ticket, but the indications favor the sending of republican delegations from the far west to both houses of congress. Democratic senatorial candidates in three states were forced into spirited contests for their seats.

In California, Senator James D. Phelan, democrat, and Samuel Shortridge, republican, engaged in a nip and tuck race for Phelan's seat. The result appears doubtful, with the advantage, if any, with Shortridge.

Arizona, normally democratic, is the scene of another stiff fight for the senatorship, with Ralph Cameron, republican, battling Senator Marc Smith, democratic member from Arizona for 22 years.

Senator George Chamberlain, Oregon's democratic member of the upper house at Washington, is engaged in the hardest battle of his career against Robert N. Stanford, republican. Two months ago, Chamberlain supporters were offering to bet five to three on the senator, but the pre-election betting is at even money.

Washington is expected to return Wesley L. Jones, republican, to the senate by a big margin.

Senators will not be elected in Montana today.

Montana is attracting attention owing to the strength which a combination of non-partisans and labor league leaders are claiming for their ticket for state legislative candidates. Many expect to see them control the lower house of the Montana legislature.

PARTY LEADERS BELIEVE CANDIDATES WILL WIN

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—With the opening of the polls, both republican and democratic headquarters early today confidently took up the stride which will carry them to the finish of the presidential contest.

"Cox and Roosevelt will win," declared George White, democratic national chairman.

Will H. Hayes, leader of the republican forces, translated his expectations into figures, expressing the conviction that Harding will have no less than 368 and probably 395, electoral votes out of the possible 537. The number required to elect is 266.

Interest in the last day of the great fight centers in the final desperate attempts to bring over "doubtful" states with large electoral votes to deliver or to save United States senators in other doubtful states where the electoral vote is not large enough to be indispensable.

The salient example of states in the first category is Ohio, home

WOMEN ARE EXPECTED TO POLL HEAVY

THIRTY-THREE STATES TO ELECT 34 MEMBERS OF THAT BODY

(U. P. Staff Correspondent) NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Appreciating the very great advantage of having both the legislative and executive branches of the government of the same political faith, managers of the two big parties have devoted much time and energy and money to the congressional campaign.

Inasmuch as the republicans control the senate now by only one vote (exclusive of that of Senator Newberry of Michigan who is awaiting appeal for a new trial on the charge of violation of the election laws,) with the chances about even between republicans and democrats for control after March 4, next, the managers have largely concentrated on the senatorial fights in the various states.

These contests generally have been waged with more vigor, and in some instances with more bitterness, than even the presidential campaign. Although the league of nations has been the "paramount issue" in the fight for the national tickets, it has been overshadowed in the senatorial campaign, in some of the states at least, by local issues.

Thirty-four new senators are to be chosen today, from thirty-three states, Alabama choosing two. According to the forecasts of political observers generally, it seems reasonably certain that the republicans will return senators from Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Kansas, North Dakota and Washington; while it appears equally certain that the democrats will return their two from Alabama, and one each from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

The expected changes, if any, will come in the following states which the republicans are hoping to retain in their list: New Hampshire, Connecticut, Indiana, Missouri, Iowa, Utah and Wisconsin; and in the following which the democrats are striving to retain, Maryland, Kentucky, South Dakota, Idaho, Colorado, Arizona, Oregon and California.

In no states of the thirty-three have the contests for the senatorship been conducted with more energy than in New Hampshire and Connecticut, where Senators Moses and Brandegee have been subject to a hot democratic fire on account of their "irreconcilability" with regard to the league of nations. It was in these states that the chief irreconcilable, Senator Borah, made his first appearance on the stump in the present campaign. While the republicans profess to be confident of victory, the democrats say they are equally sure of defeating both these senators, largely through the woman vote. Moses and Brandegee were both pronounced anti-suffragists, and although Augustine Lonergan, Brandegee's opponent, is also opposed to women's voting, his support of the league is expected by the democrats to attract the bulk of the feminine contingent in that state.

In New York state, also which the republicans are claiming for their national ticket by at least 400,000 although admitting that Senator Wadsworth will probably run slightly behind Harding, the democrats are counting on a heavy woman vote, because of Wadsworth's opposition to suffrage. They are also expecting their candidate for senator, Lt. Gov. Harry Walker, to poll well in the rural districts, where he is said to be especially popular.

The situation in Maryland is generally regarded as close, with the chances favoring the return of Senator Smith, democrat, against Orvington E. Weiler, republican.

Notwithstanding that the senatorship in Ohio is classed by the political experts as reasonably safe

Child Wanders a Mile in N.Y. Sewer

NEW YORK—Katie Helig, aged 2 years 6 months, did not have a looking-glass to walk through into Wonderland, as the immortal Alice had, so the "cute little thing" stepped through a manhole into a sewer.

And what adventures she had! She would not tell of them. Children never do. What is essential to this story is that she fell for a considerable distance, just as Alice did, landed safely, and then ambled along for nearly a mile.

She was found clinging to a damp wall past which a powerful hydrant was pumping a powerful stream flowing toward the East River.
