WOMEN RESENT "MERCILESS" CHARGE WHILE ON JURY

"Women are merciless, much more so than men," he told the court. "This from the state of Ohio, where sits the only woman judge in a criminal court, Florence Allen, first of her sex to serve in a court of general jurisdiction.

Judge Allen's own views on the woman juror were brought to our attention by Mrs. Raymond Brown, member of the New York State league of women voters, who has commented upon the opinion of the Ohio lawyer.

Woman Jurist's Views on Jurors "The best answer to this charge is contained in an article by Judge Allen in a recent number of the Woman Citizen," said Mrs. Brown, who is also managing director of that suffrage publication.

She points out one phase of the woman juror question that is worth considering—that it is difficult to get men of intelligence and education to serve on juries. They are absorbed in their business and try to make excuses.

"Such men feel they simply can't afford to give up their time to jury duty. But there is a large class of intelligent women who have the leisure for this service, and they should be given the opportunity for it.

"Women are usually suspected of being too lenient on juries and Judge Allen brings out these points in these paragraphs," Mrs. Brown said, quoting the article, as follows:

"There has been some question whether the women jurors would not be too sympathetic and let criminals go scot-free or allow them undue leniency. This doubt certainly has not been borne out in my experience. John Azzarello was tried for first degree murder before me and found guilty; the only woman on the jury was steadfast for conviction. We have lately tried Frank Motto for first-degree murder in my court. He was found guilty without a recommendation of mercy, which means that he received the death penalty. The foreman of the jury was a woman—in fact she was the only woman on the jury. From the first she demanded the death penalty for the murder which was peculiarly wanton. The jury which has just given the death penalty to Pupera, an accomplice of Motto, included four women.

Mrs. Brown then called our attention to the following: "However, in the preliminary selection of jurors for these cases, many women were excused because they were opposed to capital punishment and would shrink from sending to the chair some other mother's son. It is evident that generalizations cannot be made as to woman jurors any more than as to men jurors, so far as leniency is concerned.

"Participation of women in jury service, both on the petit juries and on the grand juries, make for intelligent interest in the courts. The community has not understood conditions in the past, and because of that inefficiency, delay and injustice have crept into our judicial system. I am confident that the participation of women in jury service is an essential step toward the realization of that universal justice which is one of the noblest aspirations of our republic."

Woman Editor Denies Charge. Miss Virginia Federick, the new editor of the Woman Citizen, is rather skeptical of the Ohio lawyer's conclusions regarding the hard-heartedness of women in general.

"I don't think it's true," she said, "that women are always merciless on juries. I do think they are very conscientious and intelligent in dealing with such serious matters.

"When the women of the United States received the vote last year the laws of Ohio made all electors eligible for jury service. Women should be made use of on juries, because thereby the chances of getting a good jury are doubled."
