UNREST PREVALENT AMONG JAPANESE LABOR, STUDENTS

By HENRY W. KINNEY (United Press Staff Correspondent)

TOKIO, July 22.—After the great crop of strikes and other labor difficulties which culminated during the war years of prosperity, when the supply of labor was so far short of the demand that the workmen were able to enforce almost the demands they saw fit to make, the period following the slump which began in March of last year, was remarkably free from strikes. Unemployment became so common that workmen were afraid to lose their jobs, as they knew they could easily be replaced.

During recent months, however, strikes have become common again, and the movements of the workmen are marked by a growing desire for what they call "direct action." While this term, as used here, is not as sinister as might be believed, it is evident that the workers are showing a tendency towards opposition to constituted authority, and the police authorities are worried considerably thereby.

Socialist gatherings are constantly being broken up, although they appear to be no more dangerous than are many such movements which are allowed to pass unchallenged elsewhere, and socialists and labor leaders often find themselves under watch by detectives and are frequently halted to police stations for explanations. In Osaka the electric light station workers recently went on strike, leaving the Chicago of Japan in darkness, and several clashes occurred between thousands of strikers and their sympathizers with the police, in the course of which many were injured. The red flag is often displayed and the old-time feudal respect for the police is rapidly disappearing.

The unrest and growing disregard for government authority is also showing up conspicuously among the students of various institutions and strikes on the part of student bodies have been frequent.

While all these movements, both of students and laborers, are not as yet dangerous in themselves, they indicate plainly a swelling tide of unrest, but while the authorities are only too well aware of this, the means of which they take to stem it have so far been utterly ineffectual.

Oregon Editors Hold Big State Convention Today

BEND, Or., July 22.—The Oregon State Editorial convention met here today for their annual confab, editors from all over the state leaving a whirl of copy behind them and coming down to hobnob with the boys.

Today and tomorrow will be devoted to business and program work, although tomorrow afternoon the commercial club will take the copy hounds on a jaunt to see the city and have a jubilee at the estate of a Los Angeles millionaire near here, to make them envious.

Other papers will be "What Does Advertising Actually Cost the Publisher"; "Getting the Rural News and Its Value"; "Does an Advertising Mat Service Pay?"; "Special Editions and Their Value—How to Publish One"; and "Is a Subscription Contest an Asset?" The convention will extend through July 24.

Large Syndicate Will Run Airship Lines in England

LONDON, July 22.—The air ministry is back of a scheme to form an imperial syndicate, in which the whole empire will be represented, to own airships and fly them.

The belief is held strongly in official circles that the strongest bond of empire lies in aerial communications, and the dominion governments are being pressed to interest themselves in a great co-operative scheme whereby world airlines connecting all the "far flung" British possessions will be established and operated as a commercial proposition.

During the war and since the signing of peace Great Britain has spent nearly 40,000,000 pounds (ordinarily about $200,000,000) on building dirigibles of various sorts, airship bases, and other lighter-than-air enterprises. The government has decided that this material must be disposed of and it is planned that it will be given free to any responsible organizations which would operate the ships for public use.

If airlines were established connecting various parts of the British empire enormous savings of time in communications would be secured. It was estimated here that the following advantage over steamship time could be secured by airship routes.

Route	Air time days	Steamship time, days
London to Egypt	2 1/2	7
London to India	5 to 6	19
London to South Africa (via Cairo)	6 to 7	21
London to Australia	10 to 11	21

From the point of view of the dominions and the empire the maintenance of a fleet of airships would be invaluable in time of war. The peace time advantages were estimated as equally important. Such a speeding up of mail communication was said to be of incalculable value to business houses doing business in various parts of the empire.

The Difference of 150 Yrs.

YOU'VE Heard the story of Paul Revere—how he clattered out of Boston and spread the alarm to every Middlesex village, etc. That was in April, 1775. It was an all night job. Today the Boston papers would slap extras on their presses and in the shake of a little lamb's tail the whole thrilling message would be in each home of the well known county.

This represents the advance of 150 years in the important business of spreading news.

The cry of "Extra—Extra" on the midnight air brings startled folks to their doors as once did the pound of a horse's hoofs and the breathless shout of the rider. Papers have supplanted the courier—multiplied his effectiveness many times—increased his speed a hundred fold.

How far back we would go without newspapers! We would remain in ignorance not only of events at home and abroad—but also of much that concerns us just as vitally—news of the very things that have to do with the personal, every-day life of each one of us.

Somebody might be selling a new, better and more economical food; or a utensil that would add immeasurably to our comfort and well-being; or some better material for making shoes or clothing—but we would never know it.

Modern advertising is a boon. It keeps our information up-to-date on the many things we need in order to live a profitable, happy and useful life in this age of progress.

Do you take full advantage of the advertising?
