Two Views of Diamond Lake

This is the first monkey wrench that has been thrown into the machinery for making Oregon one of America's greatest tourist resorts.

The addition of Diamond lake to the Crater Lake national park would make this famous playground the most beautiful in the west. A highway could be easily constructed between the two tiny inland seas, and after the deep slope from the rim of Crater lake had been made, the grade for the entire distance would be very easy.

With the addition of Diamond lake to the national park, and a fine highway built connecting the blue mystery lake with its less known neighbor, Oregon would have the most beautiful official playground in the northwest. It would mean that tourists would stay much longer in the state and that more of them would come.—Portland Telegram.

The truth of Mr. Eaton's statement before the newspaper association that we could not have both tourists and sheep has been sinking in and we now seem definitely committed to a development of the tourist attractions.

One of these, so those who have visited Diamond lake this season, agree, is in this beautiful spot. It is not so near to Bend as many other lakes of the Cascades, but it has a definite value to this section, just as Crater Lake has. We believe it should be added to the park and that Bend should do all in its power to bring the change about.—Bend Bulletin.

for a Bryan opinion of the beverage, the purpose being to secure something which could be used in advertising this region. The stage was well set, but just as the Great Commoner raised the sparkling glass pausing a moment to think of a felicitous phrase as he gazed at the beautiful mountains, a grizzled old backwoodsman horned in with this distracting and disconcerting remark:

"Of course, Mr. Bryan, that there water you see bubbling in the pool haint the same as you're drinking, but jes' plain crick water."

If looks ever kill, the aged mountaineer would have dropped dead when the disappointed Lynn turned a baleful eye in his direction.

Just twenty-five years before, Mr. Bryan was entertained in Oklahoma on a speaking tour during the free silver campaign of 1896 by a committee whose chairman was the same man—John Dill—who acted in that capacity during the noted Nebraska's recent visit to Ashland. Strange to relate, Bryan remembered the occasion, in proof whereof relating the following incident which occurred at the place first mentioned: A little girl who was an ardent advocate of free silver was being teased because she had had her teeth filled with gold.

"If I had seen Mr. Bryan first I'd have had them filled with silver," declared the southern maiden.

There was a statement in your irrigation article to which I should like to take exception," says Mr. Tavener, an enterprising Wright Creek rancher. "You stated that many fruit trees here suffer from lack of water. Many are injured by neglect, but not from lack of water. Mr. Tavener is proving the feasibility of dry land fruit farming by making his living off a few acres of young fruit trees, principally cherry and apricot. From a single ten-year-old Lambert tree 250 pounds of fruit was picked and sold for $33, which is at the rate of $300 per acre. Fifty pounds of apricots were gathered from one tree and sold for $6.25, which is at the rate of $625 per acre. Of course, it is not possible to do as well with a large grove as with a single tree, but the above yields show what can be accomplished under favorable conditions—without water. A neighbor, Mr. Ashcraft, who has had extensive experience with irrigated orcharding, finds that cherries & equally well without watering.

Speaking of cherry orchards, the fine two-acre grove on Walnut street grown by J. H. Morse and which is said to have paid for the place with a single crop, is being ruined by being used for a stock pasture and neglected in other ways. Legally, a man has a right to do as he pleases with his own property; morally, he has not. Without knowing the circumstances, the writer would not presume to fix the blame for this particular act, but someone has surely fallen down on the job.

The only example of thorough and continuous cultivation of an Ashland apple orchard which has come under the writer's personal observation is a small grove belonging to Isaac Bailey and located on a steep hillside near the top of the high hill south of Wimer street. Without any irrigation whatever, these young trees are bearing a full crop of fine fruit.

Fred Rapp, the Talent watermelon king, has two armed guards watching his patch night and day. A former guard was heard to fire several shots one night. Early in the morning he appeared with a wad of being held up by a band of robbers, who blinded him with powerful searchlights, then covered him with a machine gun while making away with several truck loads of melons. Subsequent investigation proved the story groundless. * * * Mr. Rapp has sold over $1100 worth of melons from three and one-half acres. Last year he disposed of $870 worth from a patch of one and a third acres.
