MENS HELP THE INCOME

The man who tells his wife the hens are a nuisance, clubs them out of the horse mangers, and monopolizes all the sour milk for the hogs, gets little consolation out of the proven fact that the average farm flock returns about one-fifth of the gross income on the average farm.

One woman who has had a trying time in an effort to get her husband to build her a self-feeder and a few other things to lighten the poultry work, tells this little incident. She was already buying most of the groceries for the home and some of the clothes, but when she wanted a self-feeder, the reply would come, "All such stuff has to come out of the egg money."

At last she hit upon a novel plan. When she put two eggs at the breakfast plate of the said man, she wrote on a slip of paper, "Deposit 15 cents. No deposit, no more eggs." In telling it, she tactfully skipped several chapters of domestic scenes, but observed that in ten days from the time she put out the first slip, the construction of the required equipment was going forward with unusual rapidity, her husband having discovered that the hens are fully capable of supporting themselves.
