Historic Kentucky Rifle
 A. M. Orchard has a Kentucky rifle which was in use before the Revolutionary war, and is now over 150 years old. The weapon was used with good effect by the owner's father in the Cayuse Indian war in 1848. During a long siege the soldiers were shut up in a block house fort near The Dalles, with no food except horse meat. The state promised to pay all volunteers five dollars per day, but failed to do so, although the elder Orchard served 201 days, thereby earning over $1000. The rifle mentioned may be seen in the shoe store on North Main street and is a fine specimen of the gunmaker's art, with a barrel four feet long and brass trimmings.

NO HARD TIMES IN OREGON, SAYS S. P. FREIGHT AGENT

"The day of the box-car immigrant who came with a cow, pig, and team of horses is past," says I. T. Sparks, Southern Pacific freight agent, who is in Ashland today on business. "What we are looking for now is the homebuilder with money, the man who is able to buy or develop a producing orchard or farm. The Rogue River valley is not a homesteader's proposition, but the place for highly specialized farming and fruit growing. Let the orchardist have his citrus grove in Southern California and his apple or pear orchard in Southern Oregon. With the Pacific highway to supplement our railroad, a man could go back and forth between two such properties, spending his winters in the southland and his summers here.

"The Southern Pacific is moving more freight right now than ever before in its history. There are no hard times in Oregon. The Beaver state is just coming into its own, for the fruit industry has at last assumed sufficient proportions to warrant adequate handling facilities and to attract dealers and organizations to market the crop. Recently we shipped out a solid train of fifty cars of fruit. The pessimist finds little to feed on in Oregon these days."

$442 Raised In Two Days Of Red Cross Drive

Up to yesterday evening $442 had been raised during the first two days of the Red Cross roll call for members, according to reports made by the committee captains, Mrs. Emil Peil, director of the drive, stated today. Yesterday $243 was reported paid in for memberships. The amount is expected to be in excess of the amount already totaled, Mrs. Peil said, because captains in the outlying districts had not yet turned in an account of their work.

Mrs. Peil commends Charles H. Pierce and the Ashland Ice and Cold Storage company for their separate donations of $25 each, and hopes "that more will follow their lead."

Receipt books, crosses and buttons may be obtained any time at McNair Brothers' drug store by the committee workers.
