The hero of Peter B. Kyne's new Western novel, "The Pride of Palomar," is a Californian with wit as Celtic as his last name and gallantry as Spanish as his first.

CONGRESS PASSES ACT FOR REHABILITATION OF HAWAII

HONOLULU, T. H., Nov. 29.—The rehabilitation of the Hawaiian race which in the last century and a quarter, or since the advent of the white man, has dwindled from a sturdy quarter of a million to 25,000 souls, is a problem which has agitated the entire country during the past few years. This agitation culminated in the passage by the present congress earlier this year of the Hawaiian Homes act, under which it is planned gradually to rehabilitate the Hawaiian race by putting its people back on the land. The first experiment under the new act will be tried on the island of Molokai, starting probably early in 1922, and until the experiment has been in operation for several years its ultimate success or failure will be a moot question.

In view of these facts it is interesting to note that rehabilitation on a somewhat smaller scale has been in successful operation under the Mormon missionaries in Hawaii for the past twenty-six years, and that it has been previously tried out under that same church in Utah, where the Hawaiians had shown themselves to be well adapted to agricultural pursuits.

Colony at Oahu

In 1895 Samuel E. Wooley, president of the Hawaiian mission, Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, collected a little group of Hawaiians at Laie, on the northern coast of Oahu, and then organized one of the most successful agricultural communities in the world. Starting with a barren piece of land and a few houses moved from their former sites to form a little community, the Laie settlement has grown steadily until now its 500 citizens, the majority of whom are Hawaiians, own 6000 acres of the richest sugar land in Hawaii, own and operate their own sugar mill and are in many ways a model community.

Just why this community experiment has been so successful is explained in a few sentences. First, the settlers were given the necessary sense of proprietorship by being allotted each a small piece of land for which a nominal rental was charged and on which the tenant could produce the necessities of life. Second, community life of all sorts, particularly musical, was given every encouragement and received a ready response from the Hawaiians. Third, non-religious schools were established, teaching beside ordinary school subjects, the virtues of industry and good citizenship. And last but in many ways most important, work was furnished for any man who wanted to work, principally on such community enterprises as new roads and buildings. Working along these lines, with able leaders, the Hawaiians have been found to respond readily, and the success of this enterprise encourages those who have in charge the larger work of rehabilitating the entire Hawaiian race to believe that their work intelligently conducted will be a success and will restore to useful and active citizenship one of the finest races which has thus far come under American rule.

Wisdom From Carlyle.

The world is a thing that a man must learn to despise, and even to neglect, before he can learn to reverence it and work in it and for it.—Carlyle.

WORDS OF WISE MEN.

Diffused knowledge immortalizes itself.

A little commendation goes a long way.

Ambition to merit praise fortifies our virtue.

He who does what he can has done what he ought.

The strength of will is the test of a young man's possibilities.

Truth is a mighty instrument, whatsoever hand may wield it.

All the best men have been best because they possessed "ideals."

The thought that conquers the world is not contemplative but active.

Some doubts are as generous and passionate as the very noblest conditions.

Every noble life leaves the fiber of it interwoven with the work of the world.

To strive with difficulties and to conquer them is the highest human triumph.

BARNEY GOOGLE SAYS:

Men are as old as they feel, women as old as they look.

Women, don't limp your best years away in ill-fitting shoes because you bought them at a bargain.

The man that always looks at his best is as a rule successful in his business.

Compared with other wearing apparel shoes are selling at much lower prices.

Don't put yourself on the bargain counter early in life. Save a little in your youth and you'll look at par at old age.

A woman that is a good cook also has a husband that is punctual at meal time.

Big Winter Fair
and
Jackson County
Christmas Edition

of the Daily Tidings will be issued Saturday, December 3. It will contain between thirty and forty pages, and carry a cover printed in three colors.

It will be the largest Christmas edition ever printed in Ashland, both in point of number of pages, circulation and general appearance. It will be well printed and will be distributed over the entire county.

We hope to have one or two sections featuring the Winter Fair, and will devote much of the space to boosting that enterprise.
