AN ODE TO FRIENDSHIP Swiftly the cycles of time pass by. Each one marked with a period: A new year born while one must die. And go where before went a myriad.

Think of the roses we all might strew As the years glide in and out: Each kindness a flower of beautiful hue, Transfixing forever some doubt.

We leave behind with the years that are past, Regrets and pleasures, too, And silently pause as the hand we clasp Of a friend who is ever true.

What word more potent will ere be found, Or by the tongue be spoken. To such, time's secrets may be unbound And thralldom gently broken. —John D. Hoag.
