IMPORTANT CARE OF LUBRICATION

One Part of Car That Must Be Right and Needs Special Care in Cold Weather.

KEROSENE IS GOOD CLEANSER

When Freezing Weather Arrives Test Oil to See if it is Adapted to New Conditions—Do Not Permit Water to Accumulate.

Do not neglect to overhaul your lubricating system until winter is far advanced. It is a job which the ordinary man avoids because it gets his hands dirty. But serious trouble may follow if the work is not done in time.

Change the grease in the gear-case and differential case to a heavy oil. A semi-fluid grease or gear compound will thicken up in winter and will not penetrate where it should.

Use Kerosene Method.

Properly the oil base should be removed and the strainer, pump and pipes thoroughly cleaned. A new gasket must then be fitted around the joints. This is more of a job than the average man wishes to undertake, so the kerosene method may be considered fairly satisfactory.

Before putting in the new oil let us consider whether it is adapted to the new season or not. The working temperature will be the same, but the oil sump is exposed to every blast of cold air coming through the radiator and the oil may be chilled to a point where it cannot flow.

It is dangerous to run at any time it is not suited to your engine. Use a slightly thinner oil or one which will not be too sluggish at the low temperatures usually met at your latitude. If inconvenient or impossible to change the oil immediately, keep the car in a warm place and do not take it out until the engine has run ten minutes or so and warmed up the oil.

Danger Often Overlooked.

There is one danger which is frequently overlooked and that is an accumulation of water at the bottom of the sump or oil well. This comes from the products of combustion leaking past the piston and also from occasional leakage of the cooling system.

Change the grease in the gear-case and differential case to a heavy oil. A semi-fluid grease or gear compound will thicken up in winter and will not penetrate where it should.

So pay careful attention to these details, as lubrication of the car is a matter which simply MUST be right.

March Now on Retired List

Maj. Gen. Peyton C. March, chief of staff of the United States army during the great war, has retired from active military service. But he will be long in the public eye—because of the many service rancors that only time will straighten out.

It frequently is said that General March was the Stanton of the War department during his term of duty as the chief of the general staff. General March is credited by many with deciding things in advance and, when his decision was made, with telling Secretary of War Baker to "sign here."

In war times some one in the War department must be an autocrat. March unquestionably was the military autocrat of the department during the war. Naturally, he made enemies. Today it is known that some of the officers cherish bitter feelings because of the things which he did.
