What Constitutes Advertising
In order to allay a misunderstanding among some as to what constitutes news and what advertising, we print this very simple rule, which is used by newspapers to differentiate between them: "ALL future events, where an admission charge is made or a collection is taken IS ADVERTISING." This applies to organizations and societies of every kind as well as to individuals. All reports of such activities after they have occurred is news. All coming social or organization meetings of societies where no money contribution is solicited, initiation charged, or collection taken IS NEWS.

WAR AND GEOGRAPHY
Though in no sense a compensation, the war and its results have provided a great stimulus to the study of geography. We had a like experience in our brush with Spain. When Dewey startled us with his exploit at Manila there was a general pulling down of the atlas to discover where the Philippine Islands were located, and our knowledge of world geography was suddenly enlarged. In the recent greater conflict scarcely any part of the world escaped attention in the news. Not only so many new nations have been erected in Europe and Asia that we cannot be sure of the number, but points of land in the seas of which we never heard before have become of international importance. Who, in looking at a map of the expanse of the Pacific would have considered Yap and its value? Not the size of island, but its location and the use to which it can be put determines the worth. If there were not so many islands scattered around the oceans there would be less causes of war. Because islands constitute so large a bone of contention in international conferences it is evident that statesmen studied geography and ponder thoroughly the story it tells. Possibly the experience of Great Britain in not properly appreciating the use to which an island could be put has made the nations wary in dealing with such matters. Helgoland, a little patch of rock in the North Sea was traded to Germany. It was a frightfully costly bargain for England. From the enacuity with which the victors in the war are hanging on to what they secured in the division, the blunder will not be repeated knowingly. In Eastern Europe and Asia geography is in a state of flux. Boundaries of nations may be changed in a day. Most of them would be if anybody dared. This situation makes it highly perplexing to keep up with the times. More than that, the names of places are being altered to add to the confusion. Yet, if one would keep abreast of the news, one would needs devote a goodly part of one's time to geography and then could not be sure that the procession was not in advance. As a by-product of war, we may be sure that increased knowledge of the geography of the world has made the world smaller and should make our minds broader.

NATIONAL SONG WEEK
TO BE OBSERVED
FEBRUARY 19 TO 25

In connection with the National Week of Song, February 19 to 25, the western secretary for this movement has issued the following proclamation. A bulletin to the teachers of the county has called their attention to this and aside from the daily sing in the school room a number of districts will have a community sing during the week of song. The slogan is "sing every day." The purpose of the national week of song is to "set all America singing; to cultivate a taste for the songs of the better sort; to uphold American high ideals by singing songs that uplift; to bring people together in a community spirit." The Proclamation "Because God in the victory for righteousness, and for peace He has given us, has given us occasion for great joy, and because joy is an emotion that can be best expressed in song, and because singing is one of the greatest unifying and nationalizing influences, and because the week of Washington's birthday has been designated as the National Week of Song, a week when the whole nation will unite as a mighty chorus to sing the songs we love, it is deemed especially appropriate at this time to suggest that the week of February 19th to 25th inclusive, be set aside for the singing of such songs as will express our joy, awaken a love for God and country, stimulate a true spirit of devotion and loyalty, unite us in our civic interests and develop that spirit of brotherhood which will make us a better people and a greater nation. "Because of the far-reaching influence for good and the great joy to be derived from the observance of the National Week of Song, also because great praise, such as can be given in song, is due Him from whom all blessings flow, this proclamation calls on all who believe in America and American ideals to join earnestly in the observance of this significant event. That this is done in schools and churches, by choral societies, welfare clubs, woman's clubs and all kindred organizations."

ASKS PROTECTION FOR GAME
Hawalian Fish and Game Association
Asserts That Condition on the Islands Are Bad.
The latest application received by the American Game Protective association for club membership comes from Hawaii. The Hawalian Fish and Game association has been formed by a handful of the sportsmen in the territory who have realized that unless they take drastic steps the game on the islands will soon be exterminated. Bruce Cartwright, secretary of the Hawalian association, writes that formerly the islands were alive with game, but due to poor law enforcement and the lack of adequate protective measures the condition is now serious. The greater part of the population are Orientals, and to teach them that game must be protected will prove a laborious task, he says. The Chinese dove, Mongolian pheasant and California quail are the most common upland game birds, although formerly peacocks, turkeys and wild chickens were plentiful. Golden plover are very numerous during migration. Ducks and other shore birds also visit the islands. The game animals in Hawaii consist of goats, sheep and deer. The theory has been advanced—and found the ear of the lawmakers on the islands—that deer are detrimental to forests. It is asserted that they destroy forests by eating the protective covering from the roots of the trees.

COMMUTER HAS GREAT IDEA
Warms His Hat Before Putting it On When the Morning is of the Chilly Order.
The commuter was shivering. An icy blast had chilled him through when he got out of bed to close the window and, although he was about to seat himself at the breakfast table, his teeth chattered at the thought of the cold walk he must take to get the 8:10. Suddenly a brilliant idea struck him. He dashed into the hall; rescued a soft hat from the hat rack and, slipping into the living room, turned on the electric lamp and dropped his hat over it. His better half, who had been regarding him with amazement, but who had been married long enough to know not to ask questions in the middle of her husband's brilliant schemes, stepped to the door of the living room and smiled. "Come on, dear," she pleaded; "you're late now and I've got the loveliest muffins." "Fine," was the response. "Suppose you wonder what's the big idea. Well, you know, when a man is cold he puts on his hat. I've improved on that. Got my hat on the lamp warming. The leather band inside is always so cold these mornings."

Something to Think About
By F. A. WALKER

SOME INFLUENCES

IN THESE days of doing big things, which cannot be done properly without putting into them the hardest kind of work, accompanied with undeviating concentration of thought, there is a disposition among certain classes of employees to allow disturbing influences to belittle their efficiency. Trifling as these retarding breaks may seem to the young man or woman who is inclined to entertain them, if not overcome, they soon become formidable barriers in blocking the way to progress. The thoughts of last night's rollicking play or gay dances, as they come trooping before you in the morning when you take your place at your desk, may unfit you for the day's work. Under their influence your mind wanders, eludes control and places you at a positive disadvantage with the man or woman who is able to think clearly and make every stroke count. Columns of figures refuse to prove themselves; words are misspelled; hands tremble and nerves tingle. In your dismay you wonder what has come over your usual placidity. At the next desk is a worker twice as much in earnest and not one-quarter so flustered. This timidity of yours is proof of the presence of disturbing influences, which are digging pitfalls about your feet and leading you blindfolded to the brink. The very flexibility and ease with which this is done, fail to arouse your suspicion until in some way or another you sense that you are standing on a precarious base, in imminent danger of toppling over. And thousands of others like you, through disturbing influences, are standing helpless at the brink, disconcerted and miserable. Yesterday you and they were certain of the future. Today everything is in doubt, simply because of the lack of sufficient will-power to drive frivolous thoughts from the mind and to step down on the solid ground of common sense. And these same disturbing influences have been fooling with mankind since the foundation of the world! (Copyright.)

Gabong's Finger Prints Are Nearly Like Those of Human

HUMAN FINGER PRINT - MONKEY FINGER PRINT. Photo Copyright by New York Zoological Society.

(By International News Service) NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Back yonder, when a famous scientist dumfounded the world with his belief that man was descended from the monkey, there were those—and many there are now—who couldn't see it that way. It may be interesting, then, to tell about Gabong's fingerprints. Gabong is an orang-utan, present habitat the Zoological Park in the Bronx. Now, Gabong hasn't done anything criminal, but just the same his fingerprints are on file in Police Headquarters. Furthermore, those police experts who have been in the fingerprinting job for years can't tell at a glance the difference between the prints of Gabong and his alleged human brethren. Raymond Ditmars, curator of mammals and reptiles at the zoo, was anxious to get a real imprint of one of the orang-utan's fingers. After trying unsuccessfully with vaseline and graphite, he called at headquarters, explaining the fingerprinting of monkeys wasn't as easy as handling pickpockets and such. Monkeys squirmed too much. Sergeant William H. Hammersley, in them. of the identification bureau thought the prisoners did a little squirming of their own and then explained how disobliging prisoners are caught off their guard. It isn't necessary to ink their fingers. They touch a sheet of paper unthinkingly, which is then dusted with a powder that brings out the lines in complete detail. Mr. Ditmars returned to the zoo and tried it out on Gabong. The orang's hands are as large as those of a man, and his thumb is similarly shaped. When the curator went again to headquarters with a print of Gabong's thumb and one of his own and asked Sergeant Hammersley which of the two was the human print the expert couldn't say. The sergeant referred the two prints to fourteen other experts in the Identification Bureau, none of whom could say "this is Gabong," or this is Mr. Ditmars. "The police experts produced from the files a score of thumbprints with practically the same arrangement of whorls and eclipses that Gabong's thumb showed. A magnifying glass was necessary to find the difference
