How Could He Forget?

Two men touring a remote part of Scotland put up for a night at the chief hostelry. At a loss for any other entertainment to while away the evening, they asked their host if he had a billiard table. He had. After a long search a rusty key was found, and in a remote part of the building this unlocked a door which revealed a dust-covered table and a solitary cue.

Several months later one of the guests returned to the hotel and found that the landlord's welcome was somewhat lacking in warmth. His attempt to improve the occasion by recalling his earlier visit was received with this reproachful remark: "Aye, mon, I remember your game o' billiards. I only found last week ye forgot to turn th' light out."

Little-Known Washington Portrait

Discovery of a long-lost portrait of George Washington by the American artist, Gilbert Stuart, in New York city, directs attention to the Stuart portrait of Washington which hangs in Memorial hall in the State Library building at Hartford, Conn. It was bought direct from the artist by virtue of a resolution of the general assembly in May, 1800. The understanding was that it had been painted by order of a committee from South Carolina, and was then declined on the ground that it was not a portrait of Washington.

A committee from Connecticut conferred with Gilbert as to a Washington portrait, and purchased the one he had painted for South Carolina.

New Harbinger of Spring

There was a drumming roar above the city the other day, rising and waning and passing into distance "listen to her," said the man in the street, "that's the first plane I've heard for months. Sounds kind o' good." His companion was equally pleased. "You know what that means don't you?" he rejoined. "Means it's spring, that's what it means. We use to depend on the robins, but now we've got different sort of bird flies when the weather gets decent again. Look at her, would you?" The gleam of a far-off wing as the plane banked, the sudden wind-borne stutter of sound and spring's modern harbinger drifted beyond ken.—Portland Oregonian.

When She Has Gone

"Woman's place is at home, and she should stay there," was the opinion of the municipal board of Versailles, France, when, some little time back they considered a proposal to admit women in the higher municipal posts. And the report says that women should not be encouraged to apply for administrative positions, but should remember that they would do better to confine their activities to the home.
