What Constitutes Advertising
 In order to allay a misunderstanding among some as to what constitutes news and what advertising, we print this very simple rule, which is used by newspapers to differentiate between them: "ALL future events, where an admission charge is made or a collection is taken IS ADVERTISING." This applies to organizations and societies of every kind as well as to individuals.
 All reports of such activities after they have occurred is news.
 All coming social or organization meetings of societies where no money contribution is solicited, initiation charged, or collection taken IS NEWS.

SOLOMONITES
 Itching feet seems to be a regular accompaniment of spring.

It is not so much a question now of "are we going to get the big hotel and sanitarium?" as it is, "where is it going to be located?"

Mining activities are looking up. During the week half a dozen prospectors have called at the office to secure location blanks, both placer and quartz.

Over Pendleton way the divorce mill seems to be working overtime, and Cupid is asleep on the job. Eight divorce complaints were filed in one week and only one marriage license applied for.

Pretty near time there was a shake-up in the bureau of engraving and printing. A dispatch says that an engraver has spent four months of his spare time in producing a perfect engraving of the capitol building upon the head of an ordinary pin.

Another chapter in the Jacksonville bank wrecking story will be written next Monday, when R. D. Hines, the former vice-president, will be placed on trial. His half-brother, W. M. Johnson, who is serving a ten-year sentence for his share in the wrecking of the bank, will be brought from prison as a witness for the prosecution.

Page the shade of Roosevelt! The "no children" admonition is fast disappearing from the "for rent" columns of the Chicago newspapers. The trend appears to be the other way about. An architect is preparing plans for the erection of a large apartment house with a baby buggy locker for every apartment, and a bonus of $25 is offered for every baby born in the house.

UPPER KLAMATH LAKE OPEN
 KLAMATH FALLS, April 21.—Upper Klamath lake which has been icebound, is open to navigation. Mail and passenger service by boat to resorts along the lake started yesterday.

More than one editor has asked, seriously, "Is the national house of representatives a joke?" And more than one national representative has bitterly resented the query. Admitting that there are many good and able men, clear thinkers, forceful workers, in the house, it is nevertheless inevitable that the house as a whole stands up under very biting criticism when it passes legislation up to the senate in the comfortable assurance that the senate will not make it into law.

There is but one reason for such action on the part of the house, and that is fear of "the folks back home." But the "folks back home" are by no means the backwoods men and women of a generation ago. The public school, the movie, the trolley, the automobile, even the newspaper, afford the man far from the city as good a chance to know and to think as his urban brother.

Hence, when the house passes a bill to deport all aliens violating the Volstead law or the narcotic law, it says to the folks back home, "This will please you, because you believe in anti-narcotic laws and prohibition laws."
 But will it? Common-sense justice is inherent in most Americans. We all like to see fair play. Is it fair play to admit an alien and tell him, "We have one law for ourselves and another for you; if you take a drink, we deport you; if you take a drink, we pay a fine; if you sell opium, back home you go; if you sell opium, we pay a fine?"

How can we teach aliens American justice if our house passes a bill evidently unjust?
 Let us pass all the anti-laws we, as a people, want. But let us make the penalty for their infraction the same for rich and poor, American and foreign, white and black.

GOVERNOR SETS DATE FOR WEEK OF PROSPERITY

PORTLAND, April 21.—Governor Ben W. Olcott has issued a proclamation designating the week of May 15 to 21 as "Prosperity Week," and asking the people of Oregon to observe it as such. This is an endorsement of the effort of Portland lodge of Elks to arouse the people of the United States to the necessity of one big concerted move to bring back prosperity to the nation. Portland will observe the week by a festival and golden jubilee, pageants, parades, together with the laying of the cornerstone of the Elks' new $1,000,000 temple to be the features. The proclamation follows:
 Salem, April 15, 1922.
 To the people of Oregon:

Peace, progress and prosperity constitute the goal for the biggest pageant on earth to be staged May 15 to 21 by Portland lodge 142, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. This proposed pageant revolves around the laying of the cornerstone by that lodge of its new million dollar temple in Portland.

"Elks Prosperity Week" promises to do its fair share in assisting to make the year of 1922 a big year for agriculture, business and industry of every kind. The Order of Elks believes in making the world a happier, better and more prosperous place, and by injecting some of their psychology into this week it should have a prominent part in bringing about the desired results.

I trust the people throughout the state will co-operate with the Elks of Portland in making their pageant a big success. It is the hope of the Portland Elks that their movement may be part and parcel of the wave of prosperity that is bound to come in the near future. May that hope come true.

Much Oil Left In Old Wells

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Great quantities of oil, perhaps as much as 60 or 80 per cent of the original reservoirs, are left underground in the United States when wells are abandoned because no means have been determined whereby it is possible to recover more than a small percentage of the oil, according to A. W. Ambrose, chief petroleum technologist of the bureau of mines. This failure to effect a greater recovery of the underground oil, said Ambrose, is due to the exhaustion of the subterranean gas flow.

"The manner in which gas serves as an expulsive medium was recently shown by an experiment at the petroleum experiment station of the bureau of mines," Ambrose asserted. "A steel container about three feet long and three inches in diameter, was filled with sand which was then thoroughly saturated with oil. The amount of oil introduced was known by weight and measurement. After the sand had been saturated, gas was forced into the container under a pressure of 200 pounds to the square inch. Then a valve at one end was opened, and the gas allowed to escape, bringing with it perhaps 18 per cent of the oil put into the container."

"In other experiments," Ambrose continued, "the amount of oil recovered varied from 15 to 25 per cent depending on the pressure and other conditions. After the gas had forced out 18 per cent of the oil, the container was held in a vertical position for the purpose of determining how much oil would drain out, but the capillary force exerted on the oil was so great that only a negligible quantity of oil drained from the sand."
 "This simple experiment emphasized the fact that gas is the predominant factor in moving oil to the well and that when the gas is gone the production is gone," declared Ambrose. "In any event, it is unquestionable that large quantities of oil are left underground, and, whether the figure is 60 per cent or 80 per cent, it is too large. In certain parts of the Appalachian fields, the practice of forcing compressed air or gas into a central well, from where it goes to adjoining wells and carries the oil with it, has caused wells to produce as much oil as they had up to the point when considered ready for abandonment.

"There are undoubtedly other means of effecting a greater recovery," Ambrose concluded, "and these questions should be studied and applied before the wells are abandoned."
