WHEN SELF-LOVE IS WOUNDED
Then is Called into Play the Ugliest of All Human Passions, That of Jealousy.

Jealousy is the ugliest of all human passions—and the one which makes the greatest misery in the world. It is the outcome of egotism, the twin sister of vanity, and its brood are all the sorrows of the human race. But what is jealousy when analyzed? It is the bitterness which arises either when someone else possesses that which we desire and cannot obtain, or the fear that what we possess may be taken from us by another. The very fact of our feeling fear shows that we know this other possesses a power stronger than our own—and this is a reflection upon our personal merit, and therefore a wound to our self-love, says Elinor Glyn in the London Times.

Men and women are jealous when another approaches one they love—their natural egotism is wounded by the inference that this other has not realized their own worth, and dares to dispute their sway—jealousy being resolved to fury should the one they love respond to all in glances, because the wound to self-love is deeper still in that case, and the poison sinks into the very being. But jealousy between the sexes is a more pardonable fault than any other form of the virus, because it goes back to the instinct of self-preservation and, in the broader sense, race-preservation, and although its indulgence produces misery and crime, its origin is not altogether base or wholly egotistical.

"ANGEL" WANTED THE MONEY
Evidently Backer of Show Was Tired of Its Making Nothing but Good Impressions.

The manager of a burlesque show told the following incident of his theatrical career: "Fifteen years ago a certain Chicago 'angel' staked me to a small repertory show, instructing me to make one-night stands in Kansas. Our show was terrible, indeed, but finally we left Chicago. "Our first step was Topeka. After the night's performance I sent a telegram to my 'angel,' saying: 'Topeka receipts $92.50. Made a good impression here.' "The next night we played in Hutchinson. After the show I wired: 'Hutchinson receipts $52.50. Made a splendid impression here.' "The next night found our troupe in Chanute. My telegram that night read: 'Chanute receipts $21. Made a wonderful impression here.' "Several hours later I was at the Chanute depot with my troupers when the telegraph operator handed me a telegram. It was from my 'angel.' The message said: 'Make one more impression—then come home.'"

Ballroom of the Willard After the Recent Fire

NINETY-YEAR-OLD HUNTER STILL KILLING DEER
DUNSMUIR, Calif., May 8.—To attain your ninetieth birthday and still be able to walk briskly to Shasta Springs and return, garden and do various jobs about the home is something of which any person should be proud. Such feats are accomplished daily by J. M. Null, father of Mrs. C. A. Packwood, who will on Sunday celebrate his 90th birthday anniversary.

This pioneer came to California in 1857. During the early days, while living on his ranch near Fall River Mills, he estimates he has killed between 1500 and 2000 deer and many bear.

POWER PLANTS ON McCLOUD AND PIT RIVERS PLANNED

DUNSMUIR, Calif., May 8.—Application for preliminary permits for three power projects on the McCloud and Pitt rivers has been filed with the federal power commission by Thebo, Starr and Anderson, Inc. One of the projects would be located on the Pitt river just below the mouth of the McCloud, and the other two would be located on the McCloud river in Shasta county. The Western States Gas and Electric company has asked the commission to amend a license given the company on the south fork of the American river, by eliminating Medley Lakes reservoir, Twin Lakes reservoir, Echo Lake reservoir, and Echo Lake conduit.

PIONEERS OF OREGON MEET ON BANK OF WILLAMETTE

PORTLAND, May 8.—One thousand Oregon pioneer men and women and their children met at the historic shrine of Champeog on the banks of the Willamette river, commemorating the formation of the first constituted provisional government of the Oregon territory on May 2, 1843. The day was ideal. More than 200 people made the trip from Portland by boat. At the grounds a basket luncheon was served, and the program was featured by song, oratory and reminiscence.

Conspicuous among those present were children, grandchildren and great grandchildren of the original small band of patriots who cast that memorable vote in favor of the government under the auspices of the United States.

8000 TO 9000 MEALS ARE SERVED BY CO-EDS

CORVALLIS, May 8.—Co-eds in the school of home economics of the

O. A. C., served between 8000 and 9000 persons at the home economics tea room during the fall and winter terms, including regular guests, luncheon parties and guests at banquets. The largest function was the "Beaver feed," at which 300 were present. The girls do the work for credit for periods of six weeks, each taking turn as manager, head cook, pastry cook and waitress.

WATER TURNED INTO THE MEDFORD CANAL

Water was turned into the upper canal of the new Medford irrigation district Wednesday night. It reached Bradshaw drop Thursday night, and water was turned into the district main canal Friday morning. Providing no serious leaks are found, it will be only a matter of a few days until water is ready on the east side of the valley. The work of building the Four-Mile dam and the connecting canal will be begun as soon as the snow is off the ground.

FRUIT DAMAGED BY COLD SNAP THROUGHOUT OREGON

PORTLAND, May 8.—Fruit and early vegetables were damaged by frost last night in western Oregon, and by freezing temperatures and snow in eastern Oregon, according to reports received here.

Current Business Conditions

By GEORGE E. ROBERTS

(From the Monthly Bulletin for May Issued by The National City Bank of New York)

SENTIMENT in business circles is much more cheerful than at any time last year, and this is especially noteworthy throughout the agricultural districts. Although price conditions are regarded as yet far from satisfactory, and many people still have a keen realization of the losses they have suffered, the country has generally recovered its poise, and is ready to face the future with courage and confidence.

Building operations are on a larger scale than a year ago, and sufficient to employ fairly well the workers in the building trades and building material industries. The automobile industry is much more active than a year ago, and contracts for railroad equipment are on a larger scale than any time since the war. The effect of activity in these several lines has given a pronounced stimulus to the iron and steel industry.

For the first two months of the present year, operating revenues of the 201 Class I railroads total $796,823,889, showing a decrease from the like period in 1921 of $80,334,381. Operating expenses, on the other hand, amounted to $662,105,068, were $164,947,673 less. Notwithstanding the heavy falling off in gross, therefore, net operating revenues of $134,718,821 were $613,292 greater, and net operating income was $77,304,711, instead of a deficit of $3,626,343 for the first two months of 1921.

Coal Strike
The nation-wide coal strike has been in effect a month, during which time production from non-union mines has been equal to about one-third the total normal production. As yet accumulated stocks have been sufficient to prevent serious interference with industry or any considerable advance of prices, but if the shut-down shall last another month the influence probably will be more apparent.

The situation presented by the coal industry is a very complicated one. The United States Geological Survey said of it: "The bituminous coal mines of the United States have a developed capacity and a present labor force in excess of that required to supply the demand. In consequence the capital and labor engaged in the industry are idle a large part of the time. During the last thirty years the mines have been idle an average of 93 working days in every calendar year. There is no material disagreement about the main facts of the coal industry, and the situation is so simple that it seems strange that so little is said of the remedy that is within the reach of the miners themselves. Since too many workers are seeking employment in any final industry, some of them should leave and find employment elsewhere. It then would be necessary to give regular and approximately full employment for the remainder in order to get out the required supply of workers. The consumers of coal would find that in order to be sure of having an ample supply they would have to lay in stocks. The coal operators would have to settle by competition who should have the mines and the business, upon the condition that the mines were operated all the year round, and the natural solution would be that the most available and easily-worked coal deposits would be worked first. If the miners' union would use its power to promote some such reasonable adjustment as this, it would help the situation of the mine-workers and at the same time render a great service to the public.

It is urged in some quarters that the mining industry should be taken over by the Government. This, however, would involve purchase of all coal deposits in the country, an impractical undertaking, and if that was done, what policy should the Government follow? Should it continue to divide up the limited amount of work among all the men who claimed a share of it, increasing the pay as the amount of work for each diminished, or should it organize the industry for efficient production, and compel one-third of the miners to find other work? If the latter is the remedy, the miners can apply it themselves, without the intervention of the Government. Would they rather do it of their own choice or under the direction of the Government?

Social Progress
In the course of the recent hearings upon the coal industry before the Labor Committee of the House of Representatives, Washington, the following colloquy was reported as taking place between Congressman Atkinson, of Missouri, and Edgar Wallace, representative of the Federation of Labor and member of the miners' union:

Congressman Atkinson: "Miners were getting up to last week 31 per cent more than they got during the peak of prices skid down a little now when farmers are 50 per cent of what they had then?" Mr. Wallace: "Is there any reason why we should lose because farmers weren't organized?"

This retort by Mr. Wallace indicates that he thinks there is nothing but the problem of a living wage for every group to get control of its own compensation and boost it up for the others to pay. The ambition of organized labor to improve the living conditions of the masses is, of course, praiseworthy, but there are certain truths that must be understood. One of these is that money wages are not to be considered alone in measuring compensation, and another is that the wage bill is not paid by employers in any final sense. In the last analysis the workers in the various industries are working for each other and paying each other. They are all consumers, and the consumer pays all the costs of production and delivery upon everything he buys.

Of late a new phrase has come into circulation, to the effect that there must be not only a "living wage," but a "saving wage." Unfortunately, the people who use it usually are thinking of nothing but an increase of money wages, which means that wages and the cost of living will go up together, leaving the worker no better off than the donkey that follows all day the wisp of hay-hung just ahead of his nose.

It is time practical men learned that there is no progress by simply jacking up industrial costs which carry the cost of living with them. The only broadly distributed gains that ever have come to the masses of the people have come by the improvements in industry that have cheapened and increased production. Such improvements are being made all the time, and the opportunities for them are limitless. The engineers say that the industrial output might be increased from 40 to 100 per cent if industrial friction could be reduced and the best methods now known generally adopted. That would make it possible for wage-earners to have the same time give each dollar the pre-war purchasing power. That would be genuine progress.

Foreign Loans
In view of the number of foreign loans granted in this country lately there is a revival of the argument that foreign loans in the United States should be accompanied by an agreement that the proceeds will be expended in this country.

In the situation of the United States at the present time the first appropriate comment is that such a regulation would be wholly unnecessary to secure the purpose in view, as present exchange rates virtually give assurance that any credits in this country will be expended here. So long as exchange on the United States is at a premium everywhere, nobody is going to withdraw funds from the United States. To do so would be an act of business folly. If the borrower does not want to use the funds he purchases here on his own account he can sell them at a premium to somebody who does want to use them here. The premium is proof of that. Moreover, why should we object if Holland, being in good credit, should borrow in this market and turn the resulting credit over to Germany, at a premium, in exchange for German coal or iron? The conditions may be more favorable for Holland to trade direct with Germany than for us to do so. And so there is no limit to the variety of deals and trades by which other countries may arrange to help each other to obtain credits to the United States. Why should we restrict them in doing so? The more regulations we lay upon our foreign trade the less we shall hope of it.

BUSINESS STUDENTS COMPETE AT MEDFORD

Nine Ashland high school students, who are taking business courses, entered the competitive contests Saturday at Medford. In the shorthand contest, Medford won both first and second. In the typewriting, Medford and Ashland tied for first place, and the contestants from the two schools will try for first place again Thursday of this week. In the bookkeeping contest, the instructions were so incomplete that the judges decided to throw out the contest entirely and all the contestants in the county will have a chance again Thursday to show their ability in that course.

RETURNS HOME AFTER SEVERAL MONTHS IN SOUTH

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Dickerson arrived home from California this morning, after having spent the greater part of the winter there for the betterment of Mr. Dickerson's health. The Tidings is glad to report that he is very much better.
