That empty, gone and gnawing feeling at the pit of your stomach will disappear; that anxious, nervous feeling, with heart palpitation, will vanish, and you will once more be able to take a deep breath, so often prevented by gas pressing your heart and lungs.

Doors. Little Bobbie Jones was told to write an essay on "Doors" and the effort which he sent in was as follows: "Most houses have all the doors they need, and no house is complete without at least one. The two main differences between a door and a gate is, first, their opposite location; and second, that people have much less respect for a gate, and would rather kick it than knock on it.

"But a gate is more useful than a door because it does everything that a door can do, and besides that, it can be climbed over, and often is. "The doorhandle is a small but important part of the door which people never appreciate until it comes off. Most people never notice the doorhandle unless it is brought to their notice on account of having jam spread all over it.

"Doors are great things to give people privacy, and would give them still more if it wasn't for the keyholes."

Couldn't Mean It. "Why don't you test your strength with your constituents by offering to retire?" "A man in public life should never do that," said the eminent statesman. "Why not?" "It's the quickest way I know of to get a reputation for insincerity."
