Rhythmic Philosophy

YOUR DADDY'S SHOES

There are his shoes, your daddy's shoes,
What do you think of them, son?
They are not shaped up in the latest style,
But many a race they've won.
I know they are dingy and old and worn and badly run down at the heel,
But they fit the bunions and corns he wears with a soothing sort of a feel.

Just look at them there, they are number tens, and you'd rattle around in their space, but they've pressed the pathway your feet must tread as you follow the old man's pace. He has kept them well cobbled and tallowed up, and they still make tracks in the road; they have stiffened his ankles along the way and helped him to bear life's load.

Do you sometimes long for your daddy's shoes and wish he were out of the way, so you'd have full swing to spread yourself ere that mop of yours turns gray? Do you think he's old fashioned and out of date and sort o' run up to seed, and you know you could polish those old shoes up and show us a world of speed?

There will come a time when the old man's gone, you will cherish his life so true, and hold his memory dearer far than the money he left to you,

And the thought that you yearned for your daddy's shoes
His savings with all of their care,
Will fly up your soul and roost on your heart
Like a croaking raven there.
