OUR CANDIDATE

You ought to see our candidate. He wants to shake your hand:

He has solved the situation and he's going to save the land; his picture's in the paper, and he's dolled up for fair, with perfume on his hanky and with goose grease on his hair. At first he hesitated, seemed doubtful-like and sad, he says we forced it on him, but now he wants it bad.

He'd "swap his soul off, hide and tall," To get H-O-N on his mall.

He has his sleeves rolled to his neck, He's whetting up his ax,

He vows he'll smash extravagance and whittle down our tax; he'll raise the standard of our schools in country and in town; he'll work the teachers half to death and cut their wages down; he'll stamp this glorious state of ours in red ink on the map; he's poison to John Barleycorn and sure death to the Jap. He's taking elocution, and he's all fed up on law; he is full of pep and ginger and there's gravel in his "craw."

And when he hits old Salem town He'll turn the whole state upside-down.

He sure is just the best we have, We're betting on him, too;

We'll back him to the very last, no matter what he'll do; he's mapping out a great campaign, he tackles every man, and all the other candidates will know he also ran. And when he's proven tried and true and answers all our needs, we'll ship him off to Washington to send us garden seeds.
