Cleopatra's Pearl. Everyone knows the story which is told of Cleopatra to illustrate her luxurious habits of living—namely, that she dissolved in her wine a precious pearl. No one seems to have questioned what must have been the effect upon the drink, but one scientist, at least, questions pointedly the possibility of such a solution.

Do we not all believe that the magnificent Cleopatra, regardless of expense, dissolved in her wine a pearl of great price, as if it had been a lump of sugar? Is not the "fact" familiar to every one? Yet, if you test it, you will find the fact to be that pearls are not soluble in wine. The most powerful vinegar attacks but very slowly and never entirely dissolves them, for the organic matter remains behind, in the shape of a spongy mass larger than the original pearl.

A Damp Fool. Talking about "getting work out of a husband," in a certain family there is a saying, "I wish you would do this while you are wet." A woman whose husband was very good about helping about the house had been imposed upon until it came to the last straw, when he was driven in from a hard day's work in the field in the rain.

Wolsley and Gordon. There was nothing that Wolsley loved better than to recount the adventure of his seeing Gordon off to the Sudan on November 18, 1883, and his dramatic conversation at the London railway station, says Edmund Gosse, in an appreciation of Lord Wolsley. Gordon was settled in the train when Wolsley asked: "By the way, general, I suppose you have plenty of money?" "Not a penny!" And Wolsley, adds Mr. Gosse, would recount how he dashed in a hansom to his bank and brought back the banknotes just in time for the indifferent Gordon to slip them into his pocket as the train went off.

everybody was calling her "Letty." Her new nickname gave Charlotte the serial idea, and next season she demanded another "Letty" play. "Linger Longer-Letty" was the outcome, and ever since, like the Five Little Peppers or the ubiquitous Elsie Dinsmore, Letty has put in an annual appearance. This year her "continued from last season" was "Letty Pepper," with the additional offering of "Ray of Sunshine," a little song all about herself and her tendency, like the well-known brook, to go on forever. "That song," declares Miss Greenwood, "sums up my whole philosophy of life, a philosophy that enables me to store enough happiness to supply eight audiences a week with the overflow. I am thinking of having "I'm a little ray of sunshine" engraved on my writing paper as a sort of coat-of-arms."

Mistake Too Often Made. It is true that out of the crosses and vexations of life, its petty cares and troubles as well as its great griefs, is to come the discipline that makes souls fine and strong. But we mistake our province when we allow our own ill temper and selfishness to supply such material to our neighbors. They will find all necessary hardships without our adding to the number.
