Rhythmic Philosophy

By Dick Posey

YOUR SCALP-LOCK

We scoff at "Poor Lo" in his barbarous days, And shrink from the filth and the grime of his ways, But we grant him one virtue when all has been said, And that is the scalp-lock he wore on his head.

He swept like a scorge through this fair, goodly land and graveyards grew fat 'neath his murderous hand; he would steal your best horse with a debonair grace, and the fruits of your clothesline he'd flaunt in your face; he would slay for his kind like a wolf for its whelp, but he'd give you a chance at his precious old scalp.

My son, when you strike at a foe in your track, always offer the fellow a chance to hit back; press him tight to the wall with a hearty, "Old man, here's a handhold, just capture my scalp if you can." The world hates a coward, his dark, sneaking way, but it grins with delight when you offer fair play.

No matter how currish and sneaking your foe, Hunt him down face to face ere you strike the first blow, Just stick out your chin, strike as hard as you can, Then hunt up the sheriff and act like a man.
