PLANTS NEED COLD WEATHER

Will Exhibit Here Experiments Have Shown That In Northern Countries a Certain Amount is Essential.

> According to common belief, cold weather causes plants to become dormant during the fall, while warm weather the succeeding spring again incites new growth. Intensive investigations of Dr. Frederick V. Coville of the federal Department of Agriculture, which have been conducted over a period of ten years, and which have covered every phase of this subject, demonstrate that both of these traditional theories are erroneous. Dormancy in our native trees and shrubs begins some time before the start of cold weather each winter; the appearance of Jack Frost is not necessary for the establishment of complete dormancy. Furthermore, after such a condition of dormancy has developed, exposure of the plants to the ordinary growing temperature thereafter does not arouse them from their lethargy so that they begin growth anew.

Interestingly enough, the Coville experiments show that plants which have responded to the lure of autumnal and winter dormancy will not react properly and resume normal growth the following spring unless they are subjected during the interim to a period of chilling. A certain amount of cold is essential to stimulating the plant growth.-Scientific

Bran Muffin Recipe By Washington Chef

ANTHONY GIACOFCI

Housewives may now regale their guests with the same kind of bran muffins Marshal Foch and many other noted visitors at Washington have talked about. The opportunity is presented through Anthony Giacofci, chef of the New Willard Hotel, one of the big hostelries of the National Capital. Here is the recipe which Chef Giacofci says will make one dozen muffins:

Four tablespoonfuls flour, four tablespoonfuls bran, one tablespoonful lard, one tablespoonful butter, one tablespoonful bak no powder, one tablespoonful sugar two eggs, one-fourth pint cold milk, a pinch of salt.

Mix the above thoroughly, flour with baking powder, add lard an ! butter, mix and add bran, eg and milk, bake in hot oven twenty minutes.

Improvement on Tractor.

A new attachment designed to give small tractor greater bearing area and increased pulling power, replaces the round wheels with two large sprockets, according to Popular Me chanics Magazine. Outside of each sprocket is a cast-steel arm which projects forward and downward, carrying at its front end a smaller idler wheel. A track tread passes around the sprocket and idler wheel, glving the tractor increased bearing area.
