New Sweater Styles Come With Stripes and Designs

NOT a few years back the sweater was a thing of horror-something dark and rather bulky-terribly utilitarian and a thing to be carefully covered by the wearer. But now it occupies a is a changed article, and its styles are legion. From the dark grey and navy-blue thing that it was it has become a cloak of many colors; and of many lengths, patterns, and weights. A thing not to be concealed by a great-coat, but to be worn in the open, and yet just as practical as it ever wasif not more so, for it fits into the scheme of many occasions.

There are three particularly popular types of sweaters this summer. The striped woollen one of light and medium weight, the an amusing manner. A sweater with this motif is often in plain black and white, and is quite smart. The figures are not large, of course, and are indistinguishable as such a few feet away.

The dressiest sweater, or the fanciest, is the Jersey silk one with the stenciled designs, such as wardrobe of Every-woman. But it Julia Faye is wearing in the photo This type of sweater, when not

ECONOMY! That is a word which governs elemental operations in the making of every picture in every studio, regardless of who is connected with it. At Universal City no picture suffers from economy; unrivalted facilities merely make economy without cheapness possible. In the making of the Universal-Jewel special, "Under Two Flags," in which Priscilla Dean stars under Tod Browning's direction, nothing has been spared to make details complete and perfect. Few pictures being made today could boast in a spirit of either extravagance or artistic independence of having been in production ten weeks and being half completed. For one half of "Under Two Flags," over sixty thousand feet of superior footage was obtained.

Several Laborers Hurt

Tod Browning took the unit with three hundred people to Oxnard, California, for the desert scenes, and there took advantage of Nature to save five weeks in the scheduled production time. It was estimated hat securing mammoth sandstorm scenes by means of wind machines would require five weeks.

Dreaming of five weeks' hot work on the desert, Browning woke up one morning at five o'clock to the alarm of a terrific storm. He found tents in shreds, buildings wrecked, equippage lost and "extras" frightened. He marshalled every man and woman and gave an order.

In the face of certain danger from wird and flying debris, all the storm at some time to the stage.
