Pays Visit to Yreka After an Absence Of 67 Years

(Siskiyou News)

James Campbell, who left Yreka in 1855, and had never been here since, in company with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Crider, of San Jose, stopped over night Thursday to look over the old town and see how much of it he remembered.

Campbell came here in 1853 and mined Long gulch and Beaver creek. Yreka was a town of about 500 at that time, and every citizen was a miner or living off of the miners. Hostile Indians occupied different sections of the county and frequently little parties of prospectors would be driven out and sometimes killed. But such a thing as the prospect of being scalped by wild Indians did not dampen the ardor of the men of Campbell's youth. They came here to find gold.

In an interview with the Siskiyou News Friday morning after having looked over the city, Mr. Campbell declared that about all that hadn't changed since his day here were the mountains. There was nothing of a man-made nature to revive old memories. The mountains, he said, seemed to be larger.

He stated that he had been in close proximity with savages who were on the war path in the county. One of the owners of the mining outfits he was with was killed by the Indians. At one camp there were 17 miners. Shasta Indians stormed them and killed all but one.

Mr. Campbell's twin brother, Thomas Campbell, spent four years in the latter 50's here with the Mill Riggs cattle outfit. Thomas Campbell died two years ago.

Mr. Campbell will be 89 years of age if he lives until October 9—and he says he will live much longer than that. He has his second sight and can read without the aid of glasses. He is hale and hearty and quite supple for a man of his years.

After leaving Yreka, Mr. Campbell located in Oregon, and for a number of years he has been a resident of The Dalles. The territory where he located was disputed by the Indians in the early days. There was a band of about 200 whites who fought the Indians for seven months. Of the 200 there are only three besides Mr. Campbell living.

Road Building To Make Playground Of Siskiyou

The efforts of the Klamath National Forest service to convert the vast timbered stretches of Siskiyou county into a playground the equal of any in the United States are being materialized. That the national forestry department will authorize a sufficient expenditure to build a most important link, the Salmon river road, is revealed in the telegram received last week announcing that $50,000 a year will be spent for the next three years in addition to the county co-operative fund.

The following is a copy of the message which was addressed to the Siskiyou county supervisors: "Secretary has approved expenditure of $50,000 each year for three years for use in construction of Salmon river road, in addition to county co-operative fund. No definite allotments after three years, but anticipate completing project."

The Salmon river road starts a mile below Nordheim and connects with the Klamath river road below Somes Bar. The trail is about 12 miles long. When completed this road will represent one of the most interesting engineering feats in highway construction in the state, as the rims of the mountains are cut 20 feet or more to provide the eight foot base of the roadway.

There has been spent by the national forest service more than $108,000 on this road, and this is still, in addition to the $150,000 just authorized, approximately $54,000 in the county co-operative road fund, representing more than $300,000 that the government is putting into the project.

The road is a very important one from the standpoint of development in the Salmon river section and will afford a gateway to a vast domain rich in many natural possibilities including mining and agriculture.

Development in that region has progressed slowly on account of the inaccessibility during at least half of the year. Snow usually comes early in the fall and lingers until the late spring. During the period of the snow, the only mode of transportation is by pack horse, and almost every winter there are weeks at a time when foot passage is the only means of travel over the summit.

There are many mines there that should be opened, but the owners cannot well afford to put their money into development of their properties when the only transportation for five or six months of the year is by pack horse.

The continuation of the Salmon road to connect with the Klamath highway will give a means of traffic the year around either to the coast or up the Klamath to Yreka. It is expected that the opening will be very beneficial to the mining industry on that account.

DAIRY MEETING TODAY AT JOS. SANDERS PLACE

C. C. Dixon, of Shedd, Or., and Mr. Van Kleet, also from the northern part of the state, two of the most prominent dairymen of Oregon, attended the dairy meeting today, and will be in attendance at the meeting near Medford again tomorrow. Prof. Fitz, from the O. A. C., was also in attendance at today's meeting and gave out valuable information in connection with the feeding and care that cattle should receive.

Today's meeting was held at the Joseph Sanders place north of Ashland, while the meeting tomorrow will be held at the new Jackson county fair ground near Medford. The hour of the meeting today was 2 o'clock, and the meeting will be held at the same hour tomorrow.

Swiss Lake Inspires Royalty to Song Writing

"Lovely Lucerne" Appears as Rival to Swanee River

New York City—The most melodiously-celebrated river in the world has a rival, Dicie Howell, well-known singer, just returned from Switzerland, declares. The new aspirant for musical fame is "Lovely Lake Lucerne." Not long ago, a statistician computed that the Swanee River in Florida, though only 200 miles long, had served as theme for more songs than any body of water in the world. Now Lake Lucerne, which since the war has been a haven for dispossessed royalty is, according to Miss Howell, about to steal the well-known river's laurels.

Royalty Sings Praises
"Moreover," says Miss Howell, "those who are about to press against the limpid depths of the Swiss waters are no less than royalty!"
"From carolling, strumming and twanging the strains of 'Lovely Lucerne,' a stately waltz written about their picturesque temporary abiding place, certain exiles from European principalities seem to have become inspired by the same theme and now ex-princes, kings and dukes, are turning out lyrics by the dozens."
