Radio Is Anything but "Wireless;" Fans Find It Takes a Lot of Copper

Radio Girl, on Marconi ship, sitting in maze of copper wires

BY good fortune the old word "wireless" has now given way to "radio," a shorter and more accurate term. The amateur would have changed it anyway long before this because he is coming to a full realization of what an endless amount of wire is needed to operate a really efficient "wireless" set.

The amateur as well as the professional finds himself working with a maze of copper wires and brass posts, plugs, and bases. The head phones for instance have concealed in their covering a mile of enameled copper wire with a diameter about the size of a human hair.

It is in the antennae or aerials for radio telephony that copper is of the greatest use. Probably in no other service is copper subjected to a more critical test and, in addition to providing unequalled conductivity where it is most needed, copper also permanently resists corrosion and furnishes the necessary tensile strength to resist the wind and its own weight. Attempts to substitute aluminum have met with little success because it lacks strength. And so called "copper clad" wire, which is steel wire covered with copper, gives only about forty per cent as much conductivity as real copper wire.

Experiments by the U. S. Bureau of Standards have led to the conclusion that No. 14 or No. 16 bare copper wire is the best. For large antennae phosphor bronze made with seven strands of No. 20 or No. 22 wire is most satisfactory. This strand construction absorbs considerable stress and minimizes stretching.

The Elettia, Marconi's radio ship, is a good example of the use of copper, brass and bronze where the best radio results are successfully sought. Quite aside from the lavish use of rustless material in the construction of the ship itself the Elettia is equipped with a radio room that bristles with these radio metals.

The Game of "Just Suppose"

Of course you've played it! Just suppose you hand this or had that. Just suppose you were going abroad this summer and that you didn't have to count the pennies. Just supposing is pleasant but profitless. Open an account with us for a dollar and make the "suppose" come true.
