RETORT SAVORED OF SARCASTIC

Comparison Not Flattering to "Old Maids" Evidently Meant to Convey Deep Meaning.

Once upon a time there lived in an Indiana town a maiden whose birthdays had long since passed the traditional mark of twenty-five. There lived in the same town another maiden, but she was of the sweet sixteen variety. These two became fast friends and they kept a close companionship until the older became a wife, and, eventually, a mother for the first and then a second time.

Dissimilar interests led the friends more and more along different paths and although now still living in the same town they seldom meet. Recently the matron, with her two children, was walking down the street. Her younger friend, now, too, well past the traditional twenty-fifth milestone and still single, was working in an office on the opposite side of the street. She spied her pal of other days and, being in a joyous mood, hastened to the door to greet her.

Her first two hearty "hellos" apparently fell on deaf ears, but at the third call the married woman turned and, with the barest perceptible pause, replied: "Hello. I thought that was a parrot calling."

"Well, it's the next thing to it. It's an old maid," came back the retort of the other, as she turned back to her desk.

"And she ought to be able to appreciate that, too," she added to a grinning fellow worker.—Indianapolis News.

TELLS OF ESKIMO MELODIES

Arctic Explorer Declares They Are Weird and Wistful to a Degree, and Characteristic.

Knud Rasmussen and Fridtjof Nansen and also Hinrich Johannes Rink, who was sent north years ago by Lady Franklin to find her husband, have given to the world valuable facts about the customs and lives of the Eskimos, the Detroit News observes. Christian Ledén's unique contribution from the arctic regions is in the field of music. For years he studied and faithfully transcribed the Inuit melodies. Each Eskimo, he says, is obliged to compose his own song, and no person may sing the song of another without first obtaining permission. The mother has her cradle song, infinitely low and sweet. The hunter has his song of the chase, clear and bold. Even the bad man of the tribe has his song, and it was quick and appropriately brazen.

Harmony has not been developed among the Eskimos. They sing only in unison. But their melodies are weird and wistful, often consisting of only two or three motives, which are strangely effective. It is during the long polar night that the Eskimo has time to rest in his igloo and sing his songs.

Lee McWilliams returned a few days ago from a visit in southern California, and brought with him four "Brincoe" beans. The beans are of the jazzy type, as they refuse to be quiet. Lay them on the floor and they will jump about from place to place as though alive, oftentimes jumping as much as an inch. Lee has one of them trained to hop along, and it gets over the ground nicely, when it gets warmed up.

Mother was very anxious to have this particular dinner a success. Therefore she was very much dismayed when at 5 o'clock she discovered that the maid had broken the gravy boat belonging to her best set of dishes. Then a bright thought struck her. Her neighbor had the exact set and would surely lend her the desired piece of china. The dinner went along splendidly until the meat course was served and the maid brought in the gravy boat. Then up spoke the five-year-old daughter of the house: "I want to tell you," she announced, "you'd better all be careful of our gravy boat because it isn't ours, and we'd hate to break another one today, wouldn't we, mother?"
